'New year' receives mixed reviews

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government rings in a new era of austerity today, the beginning of Ronald Reagan's first fiscal year.

There will be cheers over a tax cut, but little rejoicing by those who will get less from Washington.

Fiscal 1982 — bringing down the curtain on a age of big spending — is opening amid some confusion about changes dictated by the new president's new economics, such as school lunch cutbacks and new block grants designed to give states more control over federal programs.

It also comes at a time when Reagan is seeking further budget reductions. To help hold down the federal deficit, the president wants Congress to pare another $13 billion, beyond the $35 billion already cut from 1982 spending plans.

Some of those reductions went into effect before the fiscal changeover. School lunch subsidies were dropped in September, although officials still are trying to decide on new minimum meal requirements. And the business part of Reagan's huge tax cut was retroactive to January, although most firms won't see the difference until tax returns are filed.

But Oct. 1 does bring with it the first increment of the personal income tax cut, higher interest charges and a "needs test" for college loans, reductions in food stamps, tougher standards to qualify for welfare, smaller budgets for scores of federal agencies and abolition of the Community Services Administration, the last bastion of the War on Poverty.

States had a deadline of midnight Wednesday to apply for most of the nine block grants enacted to give them more say in how federal money is spent. Otherwise, Washington planned to continue administering the 57 programs merged into the big grants.

Either way, the states will get the lower funding levels — about 25 percent less — enacted as part of Reagan's blueprint to spur economic recovery while reducing the role of the federal government. The block grants cover programs for health, education, social services, community services, energy assitance and community development.

Joe McLaughlin, a spokesman for the National Governors' Association, said most states initially felt "this is an awfully short amount of time to take over new programs." But many states seem to be deciding they can do a better job of spending the limited funds than Uncle Sam can, he said.

"The decisions are literally being made today," McLaughlin said Wednesday, explaining that he could not say how many states would opt to take the block grants.

"This is a very large change over a short period of time," he said. "Undoubtedly, there is a certain amount of confusion ... about what the regulations mean and what the options are."

One certainty in the new year is the 23-percent, three-year tax cut, although Democrats have been sniping at it and suggesting it should be delayed in order to hold down the deficit.

Fewer people will be eligible for federal welfare assistance, and many of those who remain eligible will receive less aid.

The Department of Health and Human Services estimates that 408,000 families out of 3.9 million on the aid rolls will lose benefits under Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Another 279,000 will lose some benefits.

Children on welfare hit hardest

TWIN FALLS — Everybody is going to feel the Reagan administration's budget cuts that take effect today, but welfare workers say no one will be hit harder than dependent children whose parents receive welfare.

Although officials of other social programs say college students will be receiving less loan money and veterans will experience minor cuts in educational programs, welfare workers say they will be forced to take food out of children's mouths and provide them with less health care.

"If someone really wants to go to school, they can do it without loans, even though it may take them longer," says Anne McNevin, the social services supervisor for the state Department of Health and Welfare. "But we're going to see dramatic changes when we take away food and shelter. We're risking a poorly nourished population."

Women who raise children by themselves will suffer the most severe cuts, says Judy Brooks, the medical and financial services supervisor for the department.

Brooks says most of these women are working. And they are making just enough money to disqualify them for the grants designed to aid families with dependent children — but not enough to support their families adequately.

Eligibility requirements have been changed; fewer families will qualify for supplements to their income.

"We're taking an already insufficient amount of child-raising money and decreasing it," McNevin says.

And Brooks says that although the grants will be less, the major impact could be in health care. People who have their grants cut also will lose their medical benefits.

Willie Uhrig, an eligibility supervisor, cites as an example a single mother working for minimun wage who supports three children on a gross income of $700 per month.

Big changes beginning today in federal budget

Taxes

Personal income tax rates drop 5 percent, the first increment of the 23 percent, three-year cut. Since the change comes in the last quarter, taxpayers will get only a 1.25-percent benefit for 1981.

Savings

All-Savers certificates go on sale. The rate will be tied to what the U.S. Treasury pays when it borrows money, and interest will be tax free up to $1,000 per person.

Student loans

Interest charges for direct loans to students will rise from 4 percent to 5 percent. So-called parent loans will cost 14 percent, up from 9 percent.

Welfare

New regulations will slash Aid Dependent Children, the nation's gram. More than 400,000 families wi another 279,000 will lose some ben income and possession limits. About 3.9 million families get money from the program.

Food stamps

Higher income limits will eliminate an estimated 875,000 people from food stamp rolls, at a savings of about $1.3 billion. More than 22 million people now get the stamps.

Block grants

More than 50 federal programs will be consolidated under a system of nine block grants to the states, reducing funding by about 25 percent while loosening Washington's control over how the money is spent. Included is aid for health, education, social and community services, energy and community development.

Tax relief welcomed by many

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — "It's time for people to roll up their sleeves and go to work. We can't have half the people working to support the other half," says 74-year-old John Watland.

Speaking quickly and without hesitation, Watland, a retired Twin Falls resident, said President Ronald Reagan's plans to cut Social Security benefits "is the best idea," even though Watland himself relies on Social Security checks to buy his groceries.

He believes both federal budget cuts and tax relief for the individual are "necessary for this country to survive."

"Back in the 1930s, when Social Security was conceived, it was originally a pension fund. You worked and put money into the fund for retirement," Watland said heatedly. "Now, they've got so many things tacked on.

"Aid for the truly disabled is one thing, but there are so many others and so many who cheat the program," Watland says. "We need to draw a line and return to the idea of Social Security as a pension fund.

"Reagan's tax cuts are just as important to this whole scheme," Watland says.

The new tax law gradually goes into effect beginning today. Initial income tax relief will be small. Perhaps $3 to $6 less will be taken from an average earner's monthly paycheck.

But by 1985, an overall 23-percent net reduction in income tax rates will have occurred.

"You bet the tax cuts are going to help me," says Watland. "I receive a General Telephone and Electric Co. pension, plus some stock dividends that are heavily taxed. Any relief will be welcomed."

Twin Falls housewife Patsy Libert is a little more reserved, however.

"I would assume a tax cut will help, but I just don't know how it's going to affect my family — not until we see some change or until we prepare our tax returns," Libert says.

All-Savers available after months of fanfare, controversy

By STEVE LIPSON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Publicity campaigns for All-Savers certificates began months ago — controversy and confusion not long after that.

The new accounts are available for the first time today. With the all-savers certificates, the first $1,000 of interest — or $2,000 for a husband and wife — is exempt from federal income tax.

The certificates, available at all Twin Falls banks and savings and loans, will yield 12.61 percent interest, but the rate will be adjusted Monday. The new rate will be announced today, so people will be able to choose whether to invest this week or wait for next week's rate.

The certificates caused a national interest-rate war in August, as banks and savings and loans offered a month of high interest to investors who would commit their money to the All-Savers certificates.

Most institutions withdrew their offers a few weeks later, though, after the Internal Revenue Service ruled that commitments linking a month of high interest with the All-Savers accounts would result in the loss of the interest tax exemption.

The months of publicity about the accounts have not ended confusion about who benefits from tax-exempt interest, according to local bankers. People in low-income tax brackets can learn more by investing in higher-yielding accounts and paying tax on the interest. In ads for All-Savers certificates, most financial institutions show that a husband and wife with a $20,000 joint income can benefit from the tax exemption, but the line where the benefits begin is fuzzy and depends on each individual's taxes.

"We find a surprising number of people who can't forecast what their true taxable income would be," says Kenneth Newman, the manager of the Twin Falls branch of First Security Bank of Idaho.

Local bankers and savings and loan officials are unsure how the public will respond to the certificates.

"We don't expect pepole to be lined up outside the door waiting to buy them," says Jim Dodds, the president of First Federal Savings and Loan of Twin Falls. "We anticipate a trickle would be the closest thing to it."

Dodds believes there are a limited number of people who have incomes high enough to benefit from the All-Savers tax exemption.

However, Equitable Savings and Loan Association officials take the opposite view. Twin Falls branch manager J.D. "Pete" Youngberg said Equitable will be open for a few hours on Saturday in anticipation of a large number of customers who will want to open the accounts.

Lance Clow, the marketing director for Twin Falls Bank and Trust, said, "I kind of feel there will be pretty heavy activity the first day or two."

Bankers also were divided when asked if the certificates will lead to lower interest rates or significant economic growth.

"This is a very rare opportunity," said Steve Houston, the manager of the Twin Falls branch of Idaho Bank and Trust. The tax exemption allows investors to get a high yield while financial institutions pay a lower interest rate.

"That's almost like magic," he said.

But Dale Blickenstaff, the asset and liability manager at Idaho First National Bank's headquarters in Boise, said the All-Savers certificate probably will not lead to much lower interest rates. The All-Savers certificate is the only exception to a pattern of deregulation that has caused banks to pay more for all their deposits, he said.

"It would seem to me that the only thing that is really going to cause a major lowering would be a general decline in interest rates," he said.

Blickenstaff also doubts the All-Savers certificate will have much impact on the housing industry.

By law, much of the money raised through All-Savers certificates must go for mortgage loans or agriculture. But since the All-Savers certificates can only be offered until December 1982, lenders will be reluctant to make 30-year loans with money they only may have until 1983, Blickenstaff said.

"The one-year time limitation is a real weakness in the design," he said.

Equitable's Youngberg said the All-Savers certificate's current rate could make some mortgage money available at about 14 percent — several points below current rates, but no bargain.

"When the rates were last 14 (percent), we weren't doing much," he said.

Still, most local lenders said the All-Savers certificate is a step in the right direction. It will ease slightly the pressure on rates the lenders charge and the tax burden for depositors, they said.

"It's a seed," said Jeff Harris, the manager of the Twin Falls branch of United First Federal Savings and Loan. "I hope this seed germinates and really takes off and grows."

Paying bills now can save on future tax bills

By BEATSON WALLACE
© 1981 Boston Globe

Even though the major changes in the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 do not take effect until Jan. 1, there are some steps most taxpayers can take now to reduce their tax bills for this year.

The high tax-bracket person will benefit the most; but the Average Joe also can save a few dollars.

The first, and foremost, strategy is to pay or prepay as many bills as you can that qualify as tax deductions.

For instance, any doctor, dentist, hospital or drug prescription bills should be paid this year. Similarly, if you've been thinking about some new eyeglasses, buy now.

These itemized medical deductions will help you more on your 1981 return than a year from now, when your tax rates will have been reduced by 15 percent — Thursday's 5-percent reduction and the scheduled July 1, 1982, 10-percent cut.

Even if you don't have any surplus cash, charge as many of these bills as you can on MasterCard, Visa or other credit cards. Credit-card indebtedness incurred this year, whether an actual billing or a cash advance, qualifies as a deduction in the year charged.

Follow the same procedure with all your tax liabilities. Even if your city or county has not set its property tax rate, arrange with your bank to pay the city or county as much of your tax escrow funds as possible.

Ask your bank if you can prepay some of next year's mortgage principal and interest payments.

Do the same for any auto excise tax or estimated state income tax so that these deductions can be included on your 1981 federal return.

Someone who uses a car for business, such as a salesman or real-estate agent, would benefit by buying a new car this year and taking both the excise tax and early interest expenses this year.

Ditto for any interest payments and, particularly, charitable deductions. If you are in a 30-percent tax bracket, money given to the United Way, the Boy Scouts, your church or any other charity will be worth 15-percent more this year than next.

Unfortunately, these charitable deductions are of no help in 1981 for a single taxpayer who does not itemize. In this case, such a person may want to postpone a contribution until Jan. 1, but even then, the maximum tax credit will be only $25, hardly worth the delay.

It is not until 1985 that a single filer will get the real benefit of the change. In that year, 50 percent of any contribution will be deductible, and in 1986, you'll earn a full 100-percent credit.

Postal Service approves 20-cent stamp — A2

Postal Service adopts 20¢ stamp

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Postal Service Wednesday raised the cost of mailing a letter from 18 to 20 cents, effective Nov. 1 — an action that prompted an immediate court challenge.

It was the second increase this year. Just six months ago, it cost 15 cents to mail a letter.

In an unprecedented move, the Postal Service Board of Governors hiked the mailing rates without the approval of the independent Postal Rate Commission.

The new rates are effective at 12:01 a.m. Sunday, Nov. 1. The cost of mailing a letter will jump to 20 cents and postcards will increase from 12 to 13 cents. Some second-class mail rates, used by magazines, newspapers and other publications, will drop slightly.

In March, the governors increased the cost of mailing a letter from 15 to 18 cents, but asked the commission twice to reconsider its request for a 20-cent stamp. The commission refused each time, rejecting the Postal Service's contention it would face a $600 million deficit without a new rate hike.

The board must file its rate requests with the commission, which reviews them and issues recommendations, but it can reject any recommendation.

Wednesday's decision was immediately challenged by the National Association of Greeting Card Publishers, which filed a notice of appeal with the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the reviewer of federal regulatory decisions.

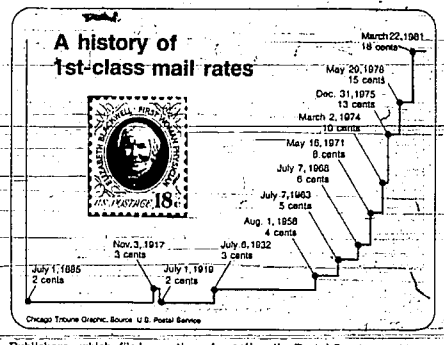
"It's brutal. The timing couldn't be worse," said Norman Halliday, the association's vice president, referring to the upcoming Christmas season.

Robert Hardesty, chairman of the postal board, said the Postal Service lost almost $126 million during the first five months the new 18-cent rate was in effect.

"If the governors had not taken this action, the Postal Service would have incurred continuing and dangerously high operating costs for at least another year," Hardesty said.

"Your local supermarket cannot sell you milk and bread and groceries at 1978 prices because it has to pay more for its goods, wages, utilities. For the same reasons, the Postal Service cannot continue to deliver your mail at 1978 prices."

Despite Hardesty's comparison, the Postal Service has already had a 20 percent increase for first class mail since 1978.



Cost of living raises?

Checks sent to dead people

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In an "astounding" $60 million federal bungle, government officials said Wednesday Social Security checks routinely have been mailed to about 8,000 dead people.

Federal prosecutors in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and other major cities are investigating evidence that relatives or friends of the deceased have pocketed the overpayment checks, now averaging $374 a month.

For families of the deceased recipients, the government slip-up has posed an unusual temptation that brought tragedy in at least one case.

John Henry Sydnor of Baltimore died May 31, 1977. For more than four years, Social Security checks continued to flow, totaling $14,287.

Last week, in the third month of an investigation, an FBI agent spoke on the telephone with Sydnor's son, John Henry Jr., 32, a photographer, and confronted him about the deposit of the checks in his bank account.

Within hours, the younger Sydnor strolled into Druid Hill Park in Baltimore and fatally shot himself in the head.

Jeffrey Segal, vice president of Segal Majestic Co. where Sydnor worked, described him as "a polite, kind and exemplary" person who photographed school children, taught adult classes and "was very spiritual . . . just this upstanding, very fine person."

In another instance, agents of the Inspector general's office at the Department of Health and Human Services found $63,000 in checks were sent to relatives of a Social Security beneficiary over a 14-year period.

Richard Kusserow, inspector general for HHS whose office began the probe, said in an interview the costly glitch in the Social Security Administration's payment system occurred because SSA employees failed to follow up on Medicare death reports.

While the Health Care Financing Administration regularly filed reports on the death of Medicare patients with SSA, they never were matched with payment lists to ensure retirement and disability benefits were cut off, he said.

The longest period of undue payments dated 15 years to 1966, when Medicare was begun by Lyndon Johnson.

SSA Commissioner John Svahn told UPI he found the payment abuses "astounding."

"The thing that amazes me the most is that no one ever thought about it; no one ever did anything about it," he said.

The HHS inspector general's office, using as many as 80 investigators to match computer lists and trace the money, turned up 8,518 cases in which Medicare reports showed a person was dead but Social Security benefits were not stopped.

With reviews completed on 1,290 cases, authorities have determined at least 1,100 were actually dead and 190 were alive but reported dead by recording errors.

Payments to the 1,100 deceased, most of whom died several years ago, averaged $292 a month for almost 45 months — $13,000 each. Total taxpayer cost was $14.3 million.

HHS spokesman Robert Wilson said agency officials are confident "a sizable part" of the overpayment will be recovered and returned to the Treasury.

A review of the other 7,200 cases is underway, but HHS guesses conservatively overpayments will exceed $60 million. By removing the dead from the rolls, HHS estimated it will save $26 million the first year alone.

Welfare

Uhrig says the woman was receiving an income supplement of $101 per month, but that has been terminated under the new eligibility system because her income was too high.

"The major impact is medical and not the money," Uhrig says. "If she can't get some kind of medical insurance through her work, it could be a real problem."

McNevin says she is afraid people will resort to raising their children in less healthy ways and possibly turn to crime to increase their incomes.

"People in desperate situations do desperate things," McNevin says.

Brooks says she expects to see an increase in child abuse and neglect cases.

Children will be getting less in terms of nutrition and clothing, and Brooks says that mothers probably will turn to lower-quality baby sitters.

"There will be more decisions made to leave small children alone, and I think we'll be getting more calls from teachers saying children are inappropriately dressed and cared for," Brooks says. "Kids won't be getting what they need as far as winter clothing."

"We're in a crisis situation, and it doesn't appear we're going to be able to continue," McNevin says.

Brooks says she thinks the drastic cuts to the welfare department were made because of an overall conservative trend to eliminate welfare fraud.

"People think that the program is for adult women who can get jobs, but that isn't the case," McNevin says. "It's for the dependent children. People are getting caught up in the feeling that welfare is being misused."

Brooks says that since everybody is suffering, many people believe welfare recipients are getting something for nothing.

However, Brooks believes the number of cases of welfare fraud is overrated.

"It may be true that there are a lot of cases in urban areas, but it isn't true in Idaho," Brooks says. "People around here know each other, and we usually get complaints early about any fraud cases."

McNevin says most women she sees who are living on welfare want to work.

"Even the women themselves tell me that it's not more welfare we need but more jobs," she says. "They want to provide well for their children. The reality is that jobs aren't available."

McNevin says many women on welfare have been out of the work force for years and are untrained.

"These women didn't plan on being the sole supporters for their families, and it's extremely difficult to get someone whose self-esteem has taken a beating on the head because of her circumstances back into the work force."

Although elderly and disabled people won't be affected by cutbacks in financial assistance, Brooks says they may be affected by pending changes in food-stamp distribution.

The welfare department will be sending a representative to Boise next week to learn the new eligibility system for food stamps.

"The reality of the new food-stamp program isn't here yet, but fear of how things will be changed sure is," McNevin says.

Pregnant women and dependent high school students are the other welfare clients who will be affected by the cutbacks in financial assistance.

Brooks says that pregnant women no longer will be eligible for financial assistance unless they are six months pregnant.

And dependent high school students will not be able to receive aid unless they will be eligible for graduation before age 19.

The budget cuts will have less overall impact in other areas — if initial indications are correct.

Because defense spending is a top administration priority, Bob Blankholm, the Boise-based regional chief of veterans assistance, says the Veterans Administration "made out pretty well" compared to other federal agencies.

Veterans will not receive any cuts in their educational benefits and only three minor changes in other programs, Blankholm says.

"I think the Congress feels that veterans are deserving people, as far as priority in government, because they have given up time, life and limb to serve their country."

Blankholm says there will be no cuts in aid to disabled veterans.

The Veterans Administration Medical Center in Boise will have to make adjustments to live within its new budget, but assistant medical director Robert Tipton says the hospital will offer the same quality in care.

However, Tipton says service-connected injuries will be treated first, and veterans with other health problems may be referred to VA hospitals in Portland and Salt Lake City.

And Tipton says more veterans will be required to buy their own prosthetics, such as artificial limbs, and wheelchairs to help keep costs down.

College students also will feel the power of Reagan's ax when it comes time to apply for loans.

Any student whose parents make more than $30,000 a year will not be eligible for guaranteed loans, according to Carrol Lee Lawhorn, the executive director of the Student Loan Fund of Idaho.

Lawhorn says students will be required to pay a surcharge equaling 5 percent of the loan for it to be enacted.

"We hope this will discourage people who really don't need loans from applying," Lawhorn said.

The College of Southern Idaho will be receiving less money from the federal government for National Direct Student Loans, and assistant business manager Dick Sterling says that students should apply earlier than before if they want to be considered.

Congress misses deadline, but passes emergency funds

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Missing its deadline by 27 minutes, Congress approved emergency funds early Thursday to keep federal agencies running past the midnight expiration of the old fiscal year.

The House passed the bill by voice vote at about 10:45 p.m. EDT Wednesday and sent it to the Senate, which was held up by lengthy roll call votes on amendments until it finished at 12:27 a.m.

The compromise measure contained a tax break for all members of Congress and lifted a ceiling on the amount of outside earnings a senator can make.

Passage of the bill ensured the government would continue normal operations with no interruptions, although the government was "left technically without funds until President Reagan signs the measure sometime Thursday. The 1982 fiscal year started at midnight.

By missing its midnight deadline, Congress allowed the salaries of federal judges to automatically rise by 4.8 percent.

Congressmen retained a cap on their own salaries and those of top executives. But under the Constitution, the judges salaries can not be reduced once they have gone up, as they did at midnight.

The Senate approved 48-44 the section of the bill lifting the outside earnings ceiling, then voted 48-44 to approve a section lifting a $3,000 limit on living expenses senators can deduct from their taxes. The overall bill was approved 64-28.

In order to technically meet the deadline, the Senate stopped its clocks at 11:50 p.m. EDT.

But Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., argued the chamber looked "pretty darned silly" with the clocks stopped since everyone knew the deadline had passed.

Senate Republican leader Howard Baker pleaded with senators to complete their work, saying, "The whole government of the United States stops functioning if we don't pass this bill by midnight."

"It's past midnight," said an exasperated DeConcini. "Let's not kid ourselves or the American public. We didn't make it." The compromise bill was hammered out earlier in the day by House-Senate conferees, who voted against a congressional pay raise this year while deciding to let members get automatic increases in future years.

Brown's staff cleared

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The district attorney said Wednesday he will not prosecute members of Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. s staff.

They allegedly destroyed evidence during an investigation of the governor's use of state computers to help his political campaigns.

The investigation was the third since the state Fair Political Practices Commission alleged last spring that 3,000 index cards sought by the panel in a probe into the use of a state-leased computer in Brown's office were destroyed by members of his staff.

"We have concluded there is no evidence any member of the governor's office . . . (or) the Brown Campaign Committee committed any criminal act," District Attorney John Van de Kamp said.

Kimball listed in serious condition

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Doctors said Wednesday that Mormon Church President Spencer W. Kimball is suffering from gastrointestinal hemorrhaging.

The condition put him back on the serious list after slow but consistent progress following skull surgery earlier this month.

Dr. Ernest L. Wilkinson said Kimball was in serious but stable condition following surgery 3½ weeks ago to remove blood, fluid and scar tissue from between his skull and brain at the site of a subdural hematoma. It was the religious leader's third operation for the problem.

On Wednesday, skies across Idaho were generally fair but there was some high cloudiness. Fog and low clouds in the Lewiston area burned away before noon.

In Twin Falls, the pollen count was 29 per cubic meter of air.

The southwesterly air flow across Idaho is dry and little precipitation appears likely except over mountain areas for several days. Areas of frost are possible through Friday, particularly in the southeastern Idaho.

Weather map unavailable

In the Magic Valley, conditions for harvesting and other outside farm work will be generally good through Monday, but hay drying may be interrupted by scattered showers over the weekend. The need for irrigation water will increase slowly as temperatures rise.

Pan evaporation is forecast at .20 inch today and .25 inch on Friday. Spraying conditions will be fair to good today with winds mostly 5 to 12 mph.

The extended forecast for southern Idaho calls for scattered showers on Saturday, continuing through Monday. Highs will be from 65 to 70 with lows from 45 to 50.

Elsewhere in the nation Wednesday, the hottest temperature was 100 degrees at Gila Bend, Ariz., and the coolest was 19 at Old Forge, N.Y.

Other highlights of Reagan's tax-cut plan include:

• The non-taxable portion of estates increases from $175,000 to $225,000 on Jan. 1, followed by increasing credits up to $600,000 by 1987.

• Tax breaks to entice businesses to reinvest and retool, including quicker depreciation of farm property and equipment.

• Incentives for individuals to place money in savings plans.

• Elimination of the "marriage penalty" double taxation.

However, this tax relief is counter-balanced in many ways by federal cuts in social service programs.

Libert was more vehement than Watland about Reagan's cuts in social services, including Social Security.

"If things go as planned, my family will be looking at my husband's retirement and at my children attending college," Libert explained. "We'll be looking at our retirement income and how the cost of living will affect us.

"I've worked off and on, and so the idea of raising Social Security (eligibility) ages and cutting benefits after we've put our money into the system doesn't look favorable to me," Libert says. "But that's looking at it self-ishly. I don't want the program to go broke, either."

Watland says budget cuts are the only solution for the nation's "out-of-control debt," and that these cuts must start with "liberal handout programs."

He believes that less of the nation's population should be dependent on federal subsidies and that tax-cut incentives are needed for people to invest "so American business can update and compete with foreign countries."

Not all of these tax breaks are automatic, however.

Avoiding estate or inheritance taxes, for example, won't be possible in all cases without visiting an attorney and having a new will or trust developed.

"It is now possible to avoid any taxes upon the death of the first spouse, because of a new marital deduction for estates. But this is not entirely automatic," says Twin Falls lawyer Paula Brown Sinclair. "Most bypass trusts I've seen written in the past don't qualify for the marital deduction under the new tax law. They must be rewritten."

Sinclair stresses that even middle-income people should check to make sure their wills are written correctly to qualify for new deductions, or else estate taxes may have to be paid unnecessarily.

Paul farmer Lowell Maughan echoes Sinclair's concerns, explaining that he recently had to set up an estate plan himself.

"The other problem that people don't tell you about is the inflation factor," Maughan says. "I was advised that, for example, a farm valued at $600,000 today will be worth $2.25 million in just nine years if 10-percent inflation continues. Since inflation will probably be much worse than that, I think estate planning and wills are even more important to farmers, even though their estates don't seem so large right now."

But still, Maughan firmly endorses Reagan's plan, including the budget cuts.

"I think budget cuts, even in the Farmers Home Administration, are OK," Maughan says. "The FmHA has spread too far from its original concept of agricultural loans. They're into everything now, so there has to be some fat that can be cut.

"The liberal big spenders that have been running this country for 40 years and have put us in this trillion-dollar debt must be stopped," Maughan continued. "People just don't seem to realize they don't get all this free money from the government. That money comes from their neighbors.

"I think Reagan is the first person to offer some good, solid ideas," Maughan says. "Tax cuts right now may only mean I'll be able to take the wife to dinner once in a while, but eventually, they'll increase spending, and that helps the nation's economy."

Economy waiting for upturn

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The index of leading economic indicators declined 0.5 percent in August, which one government economist Wednesday interpreted as a sign the "sluggish" economy may not move much in the months ahead.

The depressed housing industry took a beating in August from high interest rates. Sales of single family houses hit their third lowest level on record, the average price climbed to a new high of $88,400 and the number of houses for sale dropped to the lowest level in more than nine years.

Although the leading indicators for August went down half a percent, the measurements were evenly split between favorable and unfavorable trends.

The indicators foreshadowed more of the same for the immediate future, said Commerce Department economist Chuck Waite.

"It indicates a sluggish kind of economy," Waite said, that is in "a rather modest decline."

Despite the decline in the indicators and the housing woes, senior Commerce Department economist Theodore Torda said the administration expects its tax cut to ignite the start of an economic recovery before year's end.

"We're counting on the consumer sector to keep the economy afloat," Torda said, noting spending may increase because of the $3.75 billion in additional personal disposable income made available by the lower tax rate.

"Depending on how much that consumers spend and how much they save, it could give consumer spending a good boost in the fourth quarter," Torda said.

The year's tax bite was lowered by 1.25 percent.

Even without new spending, an upturn could be expected, Torda said, because a number of the economic indicators "may be close to rock bottom."

In August, the five indicators on the down side were led by the layoff rate and followed by new orders adjusted for inflation, contracts and orders for plants and equipment, building permits, and changes in raw material prices.

The five indicators on the up side were led by liquid assets and followed by average workweek, the pace of deliveries, stock prices, and money supply adjusted for inflation.

Still not available for August was another indicator, change in inventories, but that probably won't help the August number. "We're expecting a big reduction in inventory investment for August," Torda said.

In a separate report, the Commerce Department said fewer houses for sale were more than matched by a decline in buyers during the month as sales of new houses plummeted 14.2 percent from August 1980.

The August annual rate of sales, 362,000 units, was the third lowest since records began to be kept of sales trends, according to economist Bill Young of the National Association of Home Builders, an industry trade group.

"People just can't afford to buy the units," Young said.

Strategy

There is one more deduction category that can benefit a taxpayer itemizing 1981 expenses. It is the "miscellaneous" box on your return.

Included in this category are union dues; job-related expenses, such as uniforms, work boots or tools; rental of a safe-deposit box, which you could prepay for an indefinite number of years; and professional publication subscriptions, including any fees paid for investment advice or investment newsletters. All of these costs can be reduced by paying or prepaying this year.

Even those who have decided that an All-Savers certificate represents a good buy, because of the $1,000 (single) and $2,000-(joint) interest tax exemption, may want to consider postponing this deposit until 1982 and in the interim, invest the money in a "discounted" Treasury bill.

For instance, a three- or six-month Treasury bill bought in October would not mature until January or April, and the interest earned would not be included in this year's tax return. Then next year, you can take the proceeds, buy an All-Savers and get either 11 or eight months tax-exemption credit for 1982 and the balance for the 1983 taxable year.

The only drawback to this strategy is that next year there is no exclusion for Treasury-bill interest, while the dividend-and-interest category for 1981 represents a credit of $200 (single) and $400 (joint).

For the big-buck investor and taxpayer, there are all sorts of strategies for the next three months to substantially reduce 1981 tax liability. Foremost is the change in the 28-percent capital-gains tax.

Any stocks held for more than 12 months and sold since June 9 will be taxed at the new capital-gains rate of no more than 20 percent. Similarly, since the maximum tax on unearned income — dividends, interest, etc. — drops from 70 to 50 percent, there should be portfolio changeovers to discounted investments or sales of some holdings that traditionally have larger year-end payouts.

Another alternative is bond tax-swapping, selling long-held bonds, currently of lesser value than the original cost, for higher-priced, newer bonds yielding the same interest. This gives you a net capital loss, deductible up to $3,000 a year, to offset ordinary income in 1981. And the excess loss can be carried forward into future years.

For investors who buy gold, diamonds, art or other collectibles, 1981 is the last year that these purchases can be sheltered under an Individual Retirement Account or a self-employed Keough plan. Unless Congress changes the law, these collectibles will not be eligible for retirement-account tax deferrals after Dec. 31.

There are many other benefits for limited partnerships, which permit higher tax deductions in the first year, stock-option trades and other more sophisticated investments that can give higher tax deductions for 1981, or postpone earnings into 1982 when the maximum unearned income rate drops from 70 to 50 percent. These, though, are areas requiring professional investment advice. Review your entire portfolio as soon as possible with your broker.

Whatever the tax savings, this year or into the future, the tax act represents $750 billion in savings for individuals and business — unless Congress gets cold feet and rescinds some of the investment incentives voted earlier.

Reagan signs $1 trillion ceiling

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan met with top congressional allies Wednesday on his key economic and defense proposals.

The president's work day was clouded by doubts over success of some pet programs — the new budget cuts, the arms sale to Saudi Arabia, and the forthcoming deployment of the MX intercontinental missile system and the B-1 bomber.

Reagan Wednesday night signed legislation raising the government's borrowing authority past the $1 trillion mark for the first time in history. The new $1.079 trillion debt ceiling assured the government had enough money to pay its bills at the start of the 1982 fiscal year at midnight.

Reagan interrupted a private dinner in the residential quarters to go to the White House library to sign two necessary laws to raise the debt limit, a spokesman said.

Earlier the president saw top congressional allies, including GOP House leader Robert Michel of Illinois and Senate leader Howard Baker of Tennessee. Both told Reagan he may have to accept deeper cuts than he wants in the 1982 military budget if he is to win approval of reductions in other areas.

Reagan, as he has consistently, stood behind his proposal to trim only $2 billion from defense.

The usefulness of the meeting was called into question by at least one participant. Former GOP House leader John Rhodes, R-Ariz., said the session "wasn't particularly productive or impressive."

"We talked about the general welfare of the country," he said, "and sometimes that gets a little bit dull."

Another campaign certain to hit mark

The United Way of Twin Falls has a difficult task this year, but one which can be accomplished.

Coming on the heels of a very successful fund drive to save the YFCA, the United Way now kicks off its annual campaign to raise $160,000.

At first glance, it might seem unrealistic for a community to generate more than $400,000 in a single year ($250,000 for the Y). But few people gave the Y a chance and they were happily proven to be wrong.

Residents should not confuse the two campaigns, or think that because they gave to the Y, the United Way doesn't need the money. On the contrary, the United Way drive is an important and integral part of our community life. Without such aid, our community resources would be bare indeed.

It's also important to realize that if we truly want big government off our backs, communities are going to have to do more for themselves. Since the Reagan administration budget is effective as of today, the United Way campaign takes on even more importance.

No one wants to see such organizations as the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Red Cross, Salvation Army or senior citizens groups cut short. Likewise, it would be unfortunate to curtail the services offered by such organizations as the Arthritis Foundation, United Cerebral Palsy, the Twin Falls Mental Health Association or the Magic Valley Alcoholic Recovery Centers.

United Way serves the purpose by operating one campaign to aid and fund 13 member agencies. Without this unified and efficient effort, residents would continually be asked for donations.

United Way has been successful and it's only because of the spirit and cooperation of volunteer workers. The people who will be out soliciting funds in the coming weeks aren't being paid to do so. They recognize that without someone to carry the ball, Twin Falls could not offer the level of services its residents truly need.

We believe in the concept and spirit of United Way. Twin Falls can cap off a successful year — a year of great community togetherness — by making this fund drive not only achieve its goal, but by making it go over the top.

Cuts aren't helping economy?

BOISE — President Reagan's basic problem is not the resistance of his latest round of proposed budget cuts.

The basic problem is that the economy will remain in trouble even if he gets everything he asks.

It is becoming clearer each day that the Reagan team made a bad mistake. They assumed that tax cuts would stimulate the economy, leading to a balancing of the budget in a couple of years — even with huge increases in defense spending.

All that the Federal Reserve and Wall street can see, however, is an endless string of huge deficits. That means a lot of federal borrowing and that means continued high interest rates.

And even though inflation has abated some, the Federal Reserve is intent on punishing the country with policies that help keep interest rates up. Paul Volcker issued a Napoleonic ultimatum as to the amount of budget cuts required. Even if the president gets all he asked in the latest round, it will not satisfy Volcker.

So, unless the administration backtracks on military spending, or an already-enacted tax cuts, or both, the outlook is grim. We have what is sometimes called a vicious circle.

The economy can't revive to generate enough money to balance the budget unless interest rates come down. And the financial experts who have some power over interest rates won't let them come down until the budget is closer to balance.

Ronald Reagan won't be able to come close to balancing the budget with a sick economy, with millions out of work, any better than Jimmy Carter could toward the end of his presidency.

Mr. Volcker and other somber financial wizards proclaim that interest rates must be kept up to dampen inflation. Meanwhile, businesses collapse, stocks plummel, unemployment grows, and tax revenues sag. Volcker keeps telling us that this is good for the country. How many people believe it?

Some of the Rpublicans in Congress have lost faith, or are losing it. Oregon's Sen. Hatfield went home and found more people out of work than at any time since the Depression.

Deficits serve to push interest rates up. Volcker's policies serve to keep them even higher. How much good has this done the country so far? Has it really been any help in fighting inflation?

On the one hand, the administration pushed for tax cuts to help business expand. On the other, its policies, and the Fed's policies, mean murderous interest rates that cause some businesses to fail, and prevent others from expanding.

If inflation is temporarily held at bay a little by wrecking the economy, is anything accomplished?

By some curious logic, some experts say that interest rates must be kept high so they can go down in the future. But if high rates widen the deficit, which they do, and if this contributes to high rates in the future, as it does, then who is kidding who?

If the president cannot convince some of his most stalwart supporters in the business community, and in the Congress, that his program is fundamentally sound, who can he convince?

The fault is not with the early round of budget cuts, but with the elaborate proposed budget increases for defense, and with the depth of the tax cuts.

School childen and others are being asked to accept sacrifices for the sake of a healthy economy. The rub is that there is no prospect for a healthy economy. The new administration has achieved Congressional approval of a basic tax and budget plan that promises high interest rates and recession as far as the eye can see. Some people will feel the effects of the budget cuts but no one is feeling the benefits of the economic revival.

Boise IS better

Editor, Times-News:

Apparently there are a number of people that feel the Magic Valley is a suburb of Salt Lake City, or is about to be annexed by the state of Utah. The last time I checked we were still a part of the state of Idaho.

Why shouldn't Magic Valley Cablevision provide Idahoans with improved coverage of what goes on in Idaho?

Alas, KMVT does not adequately cover the news in the Magic Valley. Are any of the individuals that are so adamant regarding Cablevision's change aware of the fact that there are current considerations being made by the Boise stations to open local news bureaus? Something Salt Lake would hardly consider.

While there will be no loss of network programming, there will be increased local programming of interest to Idahoans.

Do they realize that the PBS station in Boise, KAID, has a nightly MacNeil-Lehrer type news program, The Reporters, that provides indepth coverage of issues pertinent to Idahoans? KAID also provides coverage of the IDAHO, not Utah, Legislature when it is in session. Or has all the ballyhoo being made for reasons other than those so far stated? Personally I am concerned with what happens in Idaho, not Utah.

I applaud Cablevision's change and want to thank them for putting the Magic Valley back in Idaho.

Only one choice

Editor, Times-News:

Now, maybe we know why!

After Gene Ritnour's statement in Sunday's Times-News (Sept. 27) I think perhaps we all know what the reason is behind the dropping of all Salt Lake stations on Cablevision!

In his own words, Ritnour said that there are other alternatives. "It would cost more! You should underline that," he said.

"If we are totally wrong, there are other alternative ways that those services could come in." (Meaning the Salt Lake TV stations, I assume.)

Could it be that Cablevision planned all along on having a second HBO channel, featuring the superior Salt Lake City stations? And, if we want them, we pay an extra monthly charge to see them.

The way I see it, Cablevision, as of Oct. 1, is leaving the viewers with only one really professional TV station and that one is WTBS in Atlanta, Ga.!

Let's wait and see what happens.

That's no choice

Editor, Times-News:

In reference to the cablevision shift to all Boise stations, it seems absurd to shift from a good variety to one diet opportunity. Though we love Idaho, though we believe Idaho to be the best, why not have variety of choice!! Boise only? That's a choice? All that is, is a choice of which kind of coverage you prefer — of the same news.

O'Connor has strength and conviction to succeed

© Washington Post Writers Group

BOSTON — Last Friday, Sandra O'Connor joined The Brethren. And an elite sisterhood.

Last Friday, Sandra O'Connor became the 102nd Supreme Court Justice. And the first woman Justice.

As all the speeches about barrier-breaking, history-making, inner-circle-integrating end, she is settling down to two of the hardest roles in the country: Supreme Court Justice and First Woman.

In some ways, this woman who won her robe with the unanimous consent of the Senate and the goodwill of the people, with the approval of conservatives and the best wishes of the Women's rights activists, faces the issues shared by any woman who has ever been the first, the exception, the only, the other.

How do you deal with the extra burdens? How do you live with the attention and the expectations? With the demands of conscience and history?

O'Connor wants to be remembered as a good Justice, but she will be judged, in large part, as a Woman Justice. Her opinions will be scrutinized for signs of her sex; her behavior will be analyzed for clues of her kind.

Like every other first woman, she will be visible and vulnerable, the one Justice in the photograph whom everyone can name.

She will be criticized if she doesn't "think like a male justice" and criticized if she does. Someone will surely want her to prove that a woman on the bench makes a difference, and someone else will want her to prove that women on the bench are no different.

It is, as Margaret Hennig, dean of the Graduate School of Business Management at Simmons (and who has studied first women in business) describes it, "a godawful burden. She knows she is going to have to prove, prove, prove."

To begin with, having run the gauntlet of confirmation hearings, O'Connor now will have to deal with a new set of all-male colleagues in the give-and-take of the Supreme Court chambers.

As Hennig says, "She will be walking into a male world and she'll have to establish herself. Most women who successfully join a male task group try to establish themselves at the level of technical competence. And while they do that, they begin to build one-on-one relationships so that when they are in group settings, they have some alliances. That's real hard when you are on the Supreme Court and have to perform right away."

If the public expects first women to be either wonderful or terrible, says Hennig, that woman is inclined to respond by being safe and moderate.

But Sandra O'Connor is not Every Firstwoman. Nor is the Supreme Court every job.

She comes to a post with lifetime tenure and she comes to it with strengths. At 51, she has the maturity, the manners and mentors of success. Like any woman lawyer or judge of her age, she must by now have become accustomed to being the first, the only.

Like Frances Perkins, the first woman Cabinet member, appointed in 1933 by FDR, O'Connor has consciously chosen the risky rewards of a pioneer. As Secretary of Labor Perkins put it, "I had been taught long ago by my grandmother that if anybody opens a door, one should always go through."

The first woman Justice didn't have to leave much behind as she went through the doors. Unlike others before her, O'Connor hasn't had to choose between love and work. Unlike others before her, she hasn't had to choose between being a woman and a success. She has been bolstered by both the support of family and the women filling up the ranks in the law behind her.

With all these strengths, she may hold the one quality that separates out the First Woman who makes a difference: the quality of personal integrity. The successful First Woman has the ability to put aside all the ambivalent expectations of the world, the ability to put to rest all the overattentive claims of coworkers, and be true to her own beliefs.

That, it seems to me, is a pretty good qualification for any Justice — the 102nd or the first.

Reagan delays notice of Saudi AWACS sale

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan delayed formal presentation to Congress of his $8.5 billion Saudi Arabian arms deal Wednesday as his new envoy in Riyadh sought Saudi agreement on key modifications of the transfer of AWACS radar planes.

The State Department informed the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the presentation of the package, scheduled for Wednesday, has been delayed until Thursday or possibly Friday, a committee spokesman said.

Senate Republican leader Howard Baker of Tennessee told the president that the package has no chance of passing Congress unless there is a change in terms of the controversial sale of the five Airborne Warning and Control System planes, included in the deal.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig returned from New York earlier than planned to personally deliver to Reagan a report received during the night from Ambassador Richard Murphy, who arrived in Riyadh Tuesday.

Murphy, confirmed as ambassador to Saudi Arabia Friday, reportedly was sent to the oil-rich kingdom to seek a compromise on the AWACS, possibly a formula involving dual American-Saudi manning or control of the aircraft.

State Department officials refused to disclose any details on the substance or tone of the Murphy's report and declined to attach any urgency to it although Murphy sent it within hours of his arrival in Riyadh.

Baker told Reagan at a morning meeting the president held with Republican congressional leaders that the sale is in trouble on Capitol Hill but "still salvageable" if modifications are made.

"I think Ronald Reagan is going to get the AWACS through," Baker said. "I told the president the AWACS situation is very difficult but not unsolvable."

The sale will go through unless majorities of both houses of Congress vote to block it within 30 days of receiving the administration's formal notification.

The Democratic-controlled House, certain to reject the sale, has tentative plans to vote on it Oct. 13. The outcome in the Senate is still in doubt although opponents claim a majority.

President Johnson's War on Poverty ends

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Lyndon B. Johnson's War on Poverty died Wednesday, and Democratic congressmen charged that in its place the Reagan administration has mounted a war against the poor.

"I would like to assure the subcommittee the Community Services Administration is prepared to shut its doors at close of business today," director Dwight Ink told the House Education and Labor subcommittee on human resources.

The Democrats responded emotionally to Ink's largely technical and managerial testimony.

"To paraphrase that famous poet (Donne), 'for whom the bell tolls,'" said Commissioner Baltasar Corrada, D-Puerto Rico, who presided at the hearing, "the bell is not tolling for the employees of CSA, the bell tolls for the poor of this nation."

The War on Poverty was the cornerstone of Johnson's Great Society. The already slimmed-down agency and its predecessor, the Office of Economic Opportunity, provided grants to the states to help local community action agencies operate anti-poverty programs.

The 1982 budget reconciliation act consolidated most remaining programs of the poverty war into a broad community services block grant, and gave budget director David Stockman authority to shut down the poverty agency.

The funding is being sliced from $521 million for 1981 to about $250 million for the new fiscal year.

"It is a very sad occasion for us to be present at the demise of a federal agency that received the support of many prior Congresses and several presidents, both Democrats and Republicans," Corrada said.

Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont., said "Americans held their heads highest" when John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson said the nation could try to end poverty, disease, despair and deprivation.

"Today is the day that history is going to record as the day when an American president sounded a retreat — Reagan," Williams said.

Ink's final testimony was largely technical, and his only words on the philosophy of helping the poor came in response to Corrada and Williams.

Congress warns of deeper spending cuts for Pentagon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan got the word Wednesday that Congress is likely to make deeper cuts than he wants in Pentagon spending, to spread the second round of 1982 budget reductions more evenly through the government.

The president, according to one participant in a mid-morning meeting with top congressional lieutenants, didn't like what he heard.

Reagan will formally announce Friday what he plans to do regarding deployment of the MX missile system and the B-1 supersonic manned bomber.

Sources said Reagan already has decided to deploy 100 of the new multi-targeted missiles in about 1,000 silos in Utah, Nevada or North Dakota and produce at least 50 of the new B-1s as replacements for 30-year-old B-52s.

Building the two strategic systems would affect U.S. military policy through the rest of the century and cost vast amounts of money.

The Office of Technology Assessment has estimated the original plan to deploy 240 MX missiles would cost $43 billion, and that the B-1s would cost around $100 million each.

Last week, in response to a mounting federal deficit, Reagan proposed a second round of budget cuts totaling $13 billion for fiscal 1982, starting Thursday. Only $2 billion of it was to come from the Pentagon, as the president sought to hold the overall deficit down to $43.1 billion.

But that division angered some lawmakers who otherwise were supportive of Reagan's economic policy.

House GOP leader Robert Michel of Illinois, one of those invited to see Reagan and budget director David Stockman Wednesday, said he "had to tell the president quite frankly that in order to make those significant second-round cuts to the extent that he wants, there might very well be some adjustment further in the defense area when the defense appropriation bill comes up."

Opening of Diablo delayed by mixup in safety features

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The Pacific Gas and Electric Co. said Wednesday the company believed the Nuclear Regulatory Commission would not permanently revoke their license to operate The Diablo Canyon nuclear plant.

The plant had a mixup in the construction of earthquake safety supports.

Plant officials said effects of the foulup will be corrected within a matter of weeks.

"It won't be a major undertaking," said PGE spokesman Dick Davin. "We're probably talking weeks, if that — a few weeks at the most."

PGE officials said Tuesday that engineers used the wrong diagrams to make "stress analyses" of the plant's auxiliary cooling system. Because of the error, some of the system's earthquake supports were faultily constructed.

At the time, PGE officials said the mixup could force "an indefinite delay" in scheduling the first low-power operational test of the $2.3 billion plant, where several thousand anti-nuclear protesters over the past two weeks demonstrated opposition to its eventual startup.

Davin said Wednesday he did not expect the NRCA to take away permanently the facility's license to operate.

Hyatt hotel ready for reopening

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — On the day before its official reopening, the Hyatt Regency Hotel Wednesday unlocked its doors for city leaders and building owners.

Officials expressed confidence the structure is one of the safest in the country.

The hotel, scene of the city's worst disaster and one of the nation's worst hotel disasters, is set to reopen at 5:30 p.m. CDT Thursday.

Mayor Richard Berkley, members of the City Council, and officials from Hallmark Corp. and the Crown Center Redevelopment Corp. — owners of the Hyatt project — strolled through the luxury hotel's renovated lobby Wednesday.

They focused their attention primarily on the 10-foot-wide terrace walkway that will connect the hotel's convention center with a 40-story guest tower.

The new walkway, called the West Terrace by Hyatt officials, has taken the place of three steel and concrete aerial walkways that crashed to the lobby floor during a tea dance July 17, killing 113 revelers and injuring another 186.

The new architectural feature rests on 10 concrete pillars embedded in the hotel's concrete foundation two stories below.

The safety of the walkways is unquestionable, asserted Crown Center spokesman Jim Dawson.

"We feel sure that the hotel will be completely safe to open at 5:30 tomorrow," Dawson said. "Public trust certainly is important to us and we would not be reopening our doors if we had the slightest doubts.

"So much care has gone into the remodeling, and the hotel has been so scrutinized, it's probably one of the safest in the country."

It's Time We Lay Our Cards On The Table!

12.61% Annual Yield Effective October 1st.

Beginning October 1, 1981, Twin Falls Bank & Trust will offer a new high yield tax exempt one year certificate of deposit called the All-Savers Certificate. Frankly, it's time we lay our cards on the table about the certificate simply because we feel it's in your best interest. The All-Savers Certificate is a sound and secure investment. However, there are some major investment and tax considerations you should know about.

1. The interest rate earned on the All-Savers Certificate will be the highest allowed by law. Your one year All-Savers Certificate earns interest at the rate of 70% of the average yield on one year U.S. Treasury Bills. The rate fluctuates and is announced monthly. (The rate on October 1st will be 12.61%, with a new rate announced on October 5th.)
2. Minimum deposit of $500.
3. Tax exemption is lost if the certificate is redeemed before the one year maturity.
4. Interest has a lifetime tax exemption; up to $1,000 per individual return and $2,000 if you file jointly.
5. The use of the All-Savers Certificate as collateral for a loan will result in the loss of your tax exemption.
6. Interest will be paid at maturity.
7. The law allows holders of Money Market Certificates with higher rates to convert to the All-Savers Certificate without early withdrawal penalties.
8. Beginning October 1, 1981, your All-Savers Certificate is insured by the FDIC.
9. Federal regulations require an interest penalty for early withdrawal.

The Bank & Trust is concerned that many people may sign up without fully understanding the tax penalties or their own tax situation. So before you make a decision ... talk to our Customer Service Representative at any office today, we'll make sure you get the savings certificate that's best for you.

What's what

Q. What's the most popular game of chance worldwide?

A. Lotteries. More people have put bets on them than on anything else. Lotteries are even mentioned a few times in the Bible. Among card games, the most popular is poker, and more women than men play it. In casino games, the most money is won and lost in craps.

Some icebergs are green.

Q. How much heat does it take to cremate a cadaver in a crematorium?

A. About 2,200 degrees F. for 90 minutes, then 1,800 degrees F. for another 60 to 150 minutes.

Are your ears about the same length as your nose? They should be, if typical.

ON THE BUS

Q. You said men boarding a bus tend to take seats on the driver's side while women are inclined to choose the opposite side. Isn't this because women want to look at the shop windows as they pass.

A. Evidently not. It's also true in Great Britain where the busses drive on the left. It's true, in fact, worldwide. Analysts say it has something to do with men assuming the driver's role, women the passenger's position.

Whiskey king Jack Daniels of 100 years ago never permitted himself to be seen without his fashionable coat and necktie.

Q. How frequently are babies born on commercial airliners?

A. Once every two maybe three years. That's the current estimate.

Local law in Washington, D. C., specifically prohibits you from punching a bull in the nose.

CHINA WAGE

Q. How much money can a newspaper reporter with 20 years of experience expect to earn now in the People's Republic of China?

A. The equivalent of $35 a month.

A rattlesnake is said to be at its best when its blood temperature is 85 degrees F.

Q. Who invented the card game of cribbage?

A. An English post-soldier named Sir John Suckling, 1609-1642.

Study categorizes eating habits

By United Press International

FOOD FANCIES

You really are what you eat. So say Edward Sadalla and Jeffrey Burroughs in the current Psychology Today. They broke down people's eating habits into categories and matched them with personality traits. Vegetarians were noncompetitive with a taste for handicrafts; health fooders were intellectual, mechanically inclined and hypchondriacal. The gourmets types were liberals who used "fun" drugs. Fast food addicts were religious, logical and conservative, while synthetic food fans were family-oriented and wore polyester.

TURNER SPEAKS OUT

Multimillionaire Ted Turner, head of Cable News Network and superstation WTBS in Atlanta, attacked the television "nitworks" Tuesday. He asked students at the Rochester Institute of Technology, "What's the point of going to college, spending a lot of money and time in getting an education and then have your mind turn to water with all the mindless junk that the networks are putting on." He admitted the networks occasionally do something good, saying: "It's impossible to be bad all the time. Even Adolf Hitler was nice to his dog."

ZOO TALK

Never mind communicating with animals — how do the representatives from 60 zoos around the world communicate with each other? The zoo folk are meeting in Washington, and they called in translators from Berlitz. Lynne Cushman, Washington director of Berlitz, said translators have had to acquire some special vocabulary to handle subjects like the mating habits of the skink, which is a lizard. "So far, nobody has had to resort to Pig Latin," she said.

THOMAS RETURNS

Richard Thomas will return to the cast of the Broadway hit, "The Fifth of July," on Oct. 6, after a four week paternity leave. The actor's wife, Alma, gave birth to triplets — with a little effort he could wind up with a bigger family than "The Waltons" on which he played "John-Boy." Thomas replaced Christopher "Superman" Reeve in the Lanford Wilson play

CELEBRITY AUCTION

Maurice and Verdine White of Earth, Wind & Fire recently helped raise more than $2,000 at a celebrity auction at a Los Angeles restaurant to aid the Jenesse Center for Battered Women and Children. Donations ranged from Playboy Hugh Hefner's pipe to the shoes Bette Midler wore in the movie "Divine Madness," to Frisbees from Kenny Rogers, an LP from Henry Mancini and a script from Norman Lear.

NAME GAME

If Harvard University really is thinking about changing the name of the John F. Kennedy School of Government to the Harvard School of Government, maybe it should think again. The Cambridge, Mass., City Council just might retaliate. "If Harvard gets too flippity," says Councilor Alfred Vellucci, "it would take only one little order of council, just five votes, to change the name of Harvard Square to John F. Kennedy Square."

Animal lovers, FAA protest turkey drop

YELLVILLE, Ark. (UPI) — Ignoring the squawks of animal lovers, city officials plan to carry on a Turkey Trot festival tradition this year and toss turkeys out of low-flying aircraft to a crowd waiting in the courthouse square.

Humane societies in Arkansas and California objected to the traditional drop last year, but the Chamber of Commerce ignored them.

The chamber this year, however, will not ignore the Federal Aviation Administration's objections to flying lower than 300 feet over town for the turkey drop.

The FAA suspended the license of the pilot who did it last year — Marion County Judge Gay Rorie — and has refused to waive the rule this year.

Undaunted, chamber President Terry McPherson says the city will use a helicopter or hot air balloon.

"We'll throw the turkeys off the top of a building if we have to," he said, which is precisely what organizers did last year after the FAA intervened.

The turkey drop is no less humane than a greased pig contest or calf roping at a rodeo, McPherson said. The turkeys simply fly to the ground, he said, and whoever catches the turkey keeps it.

Douglas Lee, a field inspector for the Arkansas Humane Association, said Tuesday he saw at least one clipped-wing turkey tumble to a violent end.

"The first bird out of the plane fell like a bomb," he said. "I have a videotape of it lying on a rooftop with a broken neck."

The Chamber of Commerce tossed out frozen turkeys to the crowd one year, but Lee said that was no better.

"Imagine if it hit the windshield of a moving vehicle," he said.

Lee, who reported Rorie to the FAA last year, said he and FAA officials will be in Yellville for the planned drops Oct. 9-10.

Judge eases restrictions for Elvis trial

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — A judge Wednesday relaxed his restrictions on television and radio coverage of the drug trial of Elvis Presley's doctor, accused of prescribing thousands of pills for the legendary rock star.

Dr. George Nichopoulos is charged in a 14-count indictment with overprescribing uppers, downers, and painkillers for Presley, who collapsed and died in his Graceland Mansion in 1977 at the age of 42, and for 10 other people, including himself.

Jury selection in the trial was delayed as prosecution and defense attorneys met privately with Criminal Court Judge Bernie Weinman to discuss procedures for questioning prospective jurors.

The trial has attracted wide attention because of the possibility it may finally answer the question of whether Presley's death was drug-related. Nichopoulos allegedly wrote a prescription for a large batch of drugs for Presley on the day before the singer's death.

Leland McNabb, attorney for WREG-TV, said Weinman agreed to modify his guidelines for trial coverage after conferring with the attorneys and lawyers for three Memphis television stations.

Weinman met privately with principals in the case, shortly after the white-haired Nichopoulos arrived at courthouse with his attorney, trial lawyer James F. Neal.

Attorneys for the television stations had protested an order from the judge prohibiting cameras and sound equipment in the corridors outside the courtroom.

Action delayed on stopgap dairy bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Objections from dairy state lawmakers barred the House from acting Wednesday on a stopgap subsidy bill.

But a new effort was slated for today to block a $1 million per day windfall for dairy producers.

The special measure is designed to hold dairy price supports at their current level until final action is taken on the 1981 farm bill. Without it, dairy subsidies will automatically shoot up when the new fiscal year begins Thursday.

The escalation will create a dairy bonanza projected to cost taxpayers around $30 million before the new farm law takes effect.

The stopgap bill — hurriedly introduced Tuesday — required unanimous consent to receive immediate consideration in the House, but Wisconsin Democrats David Obey and Robert Kastenmeier objected to the move Wednesday.

Supporters of the measure then went to the Rules Committee and got permission to bring up the bill under regular procedure Thursday. Only a majority of the House would be required to pass it.

House leaders, notified that objections would be made, had ackowledged the effort at immediate consideration would fail.

"But it isn't only a problem here," said Democratic Whip Tom Foley, D-Wash., noting that Sen. William Proximire, D-Wis., has steadfastly fought for higher dairy price supports and could be expected to object to quick consideration of the bill in the Senate.

The Senate-passed version of the new farm bill would continue dairy price supports at the current level. But a House vote on its version of the measure is not expected until some time next week.

The present support law was due to die with the old fiscal year at midnight Wednesday and without a new law, the support level would automatically revert to that set by the 1949 Agriculture Act — $13.56 per hundredweight of liquid milk, 3.5 percent above the current $13.10.

Officials estimated the higher support would cost the government about $1 million per day until new legislation is signed by President Reagan.

Rep. Paul Findley, R-Ill., one of those pusing the stopgap bill, said it might take the entire month of October to finish work on the farm bill, meaning the cost of the automatic escalation could exceed $30 million.

Government officials also feared that if the higher support prices went into effect even temporarily, dairy processors would rush their goods to market. That would oblige the government to buy more butter, cheese and non-fat dry milk — items already stacked to the rafters of federal warehouses.

In addition to the $1 million per day for additional dairy price supports, another $4 million would be spent for a wheat growers' referendum that must be held unless canceled by the farm bill.

"With the cooperation of the Senate" on the emergency measure, Findley said Tuesday his bill could save the taxpayers about $35 million.

FTC ends fight over commercials for kids

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Trade Commission Wednesday killed what had become perhaps the most controversial project in its history — an attempt to ban or otherwise limit the kinds of commercials shown to children on television.

The project, formally begun in 1978 with roots reaching back even farther, had been attacked as "nannyism" by broadcasters, food producers and other affected parties. It also earned the wrath of Congress, which eventually placed strict limits on what the agency could do.

The commission staff recommended earlier this year that the proceeding be scrapped — even though there is a "legitimate cause for public concern" — because it would be impractical for the agency to try to ban commercials.

What the agency originally considered, but never formally proposed, were:

- A ban on all commercials on shows aimed at very young children.
- A ban on ads for highly sugared foods, including candy and some breakfast cereals, on shows seen by older children.
- A requirement that advertisers devote money to public service messages promoting good dental and nutritional habits.

"It is not in the public interest to continue, this proceeding," the commission announcement said. "We seriously doubt . . . whether a total ban should ever be imposed on children's advertising at the end of rulemaking proceedings."

"We cannot justify sacrificing other important enforcement priorities to its continuation," it said.

Commissioner Michael Pertschuk, whose outspoken views in favor of the project while he was chairman triggered a lawsuit that eventually forced him to remove himself from the case, did not participate in the vote to end the project.

Congress told the commission last year it could no longer pursue the project on the premise that such advertising was "unfair" to children. Instead, the lawmakers said, the agency would have to base any final rule in the area on deception — a change that set the proceeding back.

Convicted Abscam figure sues justice officials

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Harrison Williams Jr., D-N.J., convicted of Abscam bribery charges, filed a $6 million lawsuit Wednesday against current and former Justice Department officials for violating his civil rights.

In a suit filed in U.S. District Court in Washington, Williams charged the government officials conspired to "wrongfully defame, indict, convict and imprison" him in the FBI's undercover corruption probe.

The suit alleges the defendants' actions violated Williams' civil rights and his right to be free from "government interference in soliciting a crime." It asked for $1 million in compensatory and $5 million in punitive damages.

Williams, 61, was convicted May 1 of conspiracy and bribery charges arising from the undercover operation where agents posed as representatives of Arab sheiks offering bribes to politicians in exchange for special favors.

In August, the Senate Ethics Committee recommended that Williams be expelled from Congress, accusing him of "ethically repugnant" conduct. The full Senate is expected to debate the case early in November.

Williams has not yet been sentenced and is appealing the conviction.

Named as defendants in the suit were former Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti; former top Justice Department officials Philip Heymann and Irvin Nathan; FBI Director William Webster; Thomas Puccio, head of the Justice Department's Brooklyn Strike Force; informant Melvin Weinberg, and FBI agents Anthony Amoroso, John Good and Richard Farhart.

Also named was Attorney General William French Smith, who was sued in his official capacity.

Williams, who has been in the Senate since 1959, charged that he was "targeted" by the Abscam operation in early 1979.

"During this period of time, he (Williams) was the victim of several orchestrated scenarios wherein various defendants sought to suborn his conduct such that certain false impressions could be obtained on videotape which would provide the basis for his prosecution," the lawsuit said.

As part of the plot, the suit charged that Weinberg, a convicted felon, "conditioned" Williams' mind and planted what subjects he should talk about when he met with the supposed Arab sheik.

"Weinberg knew full well that he was putting these words in (Williams') mouth and that once stated in substance by (Williams) they would be videotaped to create the false impression of impropriety," the suit said.

Gregory tires of excuses from researchers

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Political activist Dick Gregory challenged medical researchers Wednesday to "stop making excuses" for world hunger and study carefully the findings of his 70-day fast.

Gregory, who topped off his water-only fast with a 100-mile trek to the state capital in Baton Rouge, disputed a Tulane University scientist's claim that the experiment was virtually meaningless.

"I'm saying that the scientific world is going to have to stop making excuses," the comedian-turned-activist said. "If Liz Taylor's children died or Andy Young's children died from starvation, we'd have a whole lot of information.

"But 28 people die on this planet every minute. The 70 days I've been here over 100,000 people have died. I feel sick and tired of hearing medical people say 'Well, he made it because he's in such good condition.'"

Dr. Robert Burch, a professor of medicine at Tulane, said the data gathered during Gregory's fast would not be useful because it was based on only one body.

"Even if you see something, it doesn't mean very much," he said. "What happens with the next 100 people who do the same thing?"

Burch said the value of the fast was also limited by Gregory's good condition at the start — which made him unlike the starving populations of the world, "who tend to be malnourished from the day they are born."

Marshals raid 'look-alike' drug factories

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. marshals in five states raided makers of counterfeit pep pills Wednesday in the government's first crackdown on a "legal high" industry churning out tablets that look like powerful drugs.

The marshals seized "look-alike" tablets and manufacturing equipment in New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Florida and Alabama, the Food and Drug Administration announced.

The pills are made with legal ingredients like caffeine and decongestants, but similar in shape, size and color to powerful "uppers" and "downers" often sold illegally on the street, leading to the name "look-alikes."

The drugs have been the source of growing controversy. The FDA said the pills have been distributed nationwide through ads in campus newspapers, the mails and handbills at truckstops.

In the past, the FDA's position on the drugs — touted as offering a legal "high" — has been that they are a matter for the states to control.

Thirteen states have banned look-alikes, and health officials in some states have reported overdose deaths from the drugs.

The FDA said it has "received numerous inquiries from parents concerned with the promotion of these products as being 100 percent legal, and with the infiltration of the look-alikes into high schools and colleges.

"Law enforcement officials and physicans have also voiced concern at being deceived by the counterfeits and frustrated in providing proper medical care in overdose cases," the statement said.

Minnesota Fats claims champs born, not made

By LEON DANIEL
UPI National Reporter

DOWELL, Ill. (UPI) — "I'm the world's greatest pool player," said Minnesota Fats, fixing me with beady blue eyes set deep in his fleshy face.

Under his steady gaze and impossibly fast patter, I felt like an eight-ball destined for a corner pocket.

"I can beat anybody living on earth," he asserted.

I was still scribbling that in my notebook when the rotund man with the thatch of white hair continued his verbal run of the table.

"I'm also known as the world's greatest card player," he said.

Champions are born, not made, Fats explained.

"You either are or you ain't," he said. "Me, I was born an expert pool and card player. I've been hanging around saloons since I was two years old. When I was six, I was hustling craps and cards."

Fats claims to have been born in New York City but he won't say when. My guess is that it was about 65 years ago.

"When I was a baby, this bartender used to set me down in the middle of a pool table to keep me away from the free lunch," he said. "I'd sit there and roll them balls around."

In the interview in his comfortable bungalow in this Southern Illinois town of 400, Fats reluctantly acknowledged his real name is Rudolph Wanderone. He said his parents were Swiss.

The only conspicuous evidence of affluence was an expensive pool table and several limousines parked outside.

"I don't know myself how many limousines I've got," Fats said. "I've got them in Los Angeles, St. Louis and Chicago. I own Minnesota Fats Enterprises. I'm the largest manufacturer of pool tables on earth. I'm the chairman of the board and the president."

Fats said he is in great demand as an entertainer.

"I open a lot of casinos," he said. "I've played the best clubs all over the world."

Fats said he has been traveling all his life.

"I would go to different cities all over the world and play any living creature," he said. "I didn't hustle. A hustle is when you take advantage of somebody — not when you play champions.

"When I went to Hong Kong, I played Happy the Chinaman, the greatest Chinese pool player in the world," Fats said. "When I went to Istanbul, I played The Terrible Turk. Everywhere you go, you've got to play their game."

Fats said that kind of experience paid off — both in pool and cards.

"The reason I'm so great in these games is that I've played in all them places where there was nothing but foreigners," he explained.

"I never went to school in my life," said the man who claims to have been called Minnesota Fats since "I broke everybody in Minnesota when I was 12 years old."

Fats said he weighs 215 pounds.

"At my peak I was 290," he said. "I lost 126 pounds when I was pronounced dead. I was stone dead when they opened me up. I had what every old man gets and what you will get, too, when you get old — prostate trouble. When they operated on me, it was almost too late."

Fats described the current state of his health as "perfect."

"It couldn't be no better," he said. "I can do anything I could do when I was 15.

"I've been around a long time," Fats said. "My age is one of the biggest controversies on earth. They got me down all the way up to a hundred."

Fats said he has been living in this area for "about 40 years."

"I married a girl from here," he said.

Fats' career in show business began with the release of "The Hustler," a movie about pool sharks which featured a character based on his life.

"Nobody living ever hustled me," Fats said. "And I never hustled nobody either. I'm purer than the Pope in Rome. I got no skeletons in the closet at all. I've taken care of almost everybody in this town for 40 years.

"Hustling is what people do in business," he said. "When you wear a size 42 and the salesman ain't got it and he pinches a 42 up in the back and tells you you look great, that's hustling."

Fats got up to display a $1,000 pool cue he said the late Elvis Presley had ordered from his firm just before he died.

"See, it's got inlays — opals and gold," he said, making a bridge with his carefully manicured left hand and sighting down the cue.

"I never practice," he said.

"The other professionals play 365 days a year," Fats said. "They have to. They don't get the kind of money I get."

Fats claims to be an expert shot with a rifle but said he does not hunt.

"I don't do nothing outdoors," he said. "I'm an indoors man. All I do is eat, sheep and play with the women. I've done it all my life."

"I could have been an expert golfer but I've never hit a ball in my life," he said. "All pool players are expert golfers. A lot of them hustle golf."

Fats, who still has a formidable stomach, said, "I can eat more than anybody living. Anything, anywhere. But now I don't eat nothing."

The interview over, I figured if Fats had not actually hustled me, I had at least been dispatched as easily as had Happy the Chinaman, not to mention The Terrible Turk.

Willa Caldwell, longtime Wendell resident, has made a Bicentennial flag out of some of the many fair ribbons she's won

Willa Caldwell has busy fingers

She's still winning prizes at 87

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News Writer

WENDELL — Willa Caldwell has won so many blue ribbons at county fairs she's made a Bicentennial flag of some of them.

And she still has enough left to make a quilt if she had time. The 87-year-old Wendell woman keeps so busy with her many types of handiwork and community service she finds it hard to find time to attend the Senior Citizens Center events, even though she thinks they are worthwhile.

She's been winning blue ribbons at both the Gooding and Twin Falls County Fairs for so long she can't remember when she started showing both her needlecraft and cooking skills.

This year she was visiting one of her children and so missed the Gooding fair, but got back just in time to take a cake and some of her needlework to the Twin Falls County Fair.

"The women in charge said they were wondering what had happened to me," she laughed.

About 10 more ribbons were added to her winnings this year. Throughout the years the premium money she earned has helped pay for the materials to launch another year's work.

Like many people who create beautiful and interesting craft items, she sells a few along as people "come and ask" but mainly gives them away to lucky relatives and friends. Since she has five children, one step-daughter and 23 grandchildren, as well as countless friends, it's no wonder that she doesn't have much spare time.

And her needlework provides a mainstay for the annual bazaar at the Wendell United Methodist Church where Mrs. Caldwell has been an active member for years.

She serves as chairman of the United Methodist Women's (UMW) gift closet, which responsibility tends to "keep her going," she said.

The Methodist women were to meet at Mrs. Caldwell's house the day after our interview to work on a quilt for the late fall bazaar, the annual fund raising event.

Silk quilts, similar to the one being worked on at her home for the December bazaar, have brought $125 in the past, and constitute one of the biggest money raising items for the women's church work.

Mrs. Caldwell's home is filled with examples of her needlework — heirloom tablecloths, ornate pillows and all types of different craft items for holiday time, including angels and Christmas tree balls with individualized decorations such as tatted snowflakes.

She just completed a crocheted doll for the youngest of her 35 great-grandchildren.

Surprisingly, however, knitting is not one of her "long suits."

"I only learned to knit during World War 2," Mrs. Caldwell said, "and I often felt sorry for the poor soldiers who had to wear the stockings I made."

But she has more than made up for lack of zeal in this department since she has crocheted, tatted and done all types of embroidery "always."

Mrs. Caldwell, whose husband, Hugh, died in 1970, has lived in Wendell more than 60 years. The couple moved here in 1920 from Pine, a small Elmore County community, where they met. Mr. Caldwell was custodian of the Wendell High School for many years.

The Wendell streets were filled with mud and the town was several times smaller than its present size when she came here six decades ago, the longtime resident said.

Mrs. Caldwell was born March 27, 1894, in East Lynn, Mo., where she lived as a young girl. Her father, who was a banker and later farmed, like to move around, she said, so she lived in various places before settling in Wendell.

She has served as president of the women's church group twice — once when the group was the Women's Society of Christian Service, and again just last year. She's also chairman of the UMW nominating committee.

Currently Mrs. Caldwell serves as chairman of Christian Personhood for the UMW, is vice president of the Gooding County Extension Club and belongs to the Wendell Home Improvement Club.

Her other major civic interest is the Wendell Health Council, of which she is chairman. This group, formed many years ago, has for years operated a loan closet of sick-room equipment, including seven wheelchairs as well as walkers, canes, and crutches.

The council, to which Mrs. Caldwell has belonged since 1934, meets monthly. Equipment is loaned to any Gooding County resident free for the first three months, with small charges made after that. The equipment is kept in the City Hall when not being used.

"We feel we are doing a little good," she said modestly.

The Wendell woman views her needlework achievements as a normal on-going part of family life. She first learned to sew, sitting at her mother's knee as a child. And all her daughters are continuing the needlework activity.

"I've just always done it," Mrs. Caldwell said simply in answer to how she got interested in so many kinds of craft work. "When I was little my mother would give my sisters and me small pieces to cut as she was working on a quilt.

Her children include Velma Sneed of San Gabriel, Calif.; Lucille Simmons and Harvey Hudson, both of Bremmerton, Wash.; Robert Caldwell of McCall and Thelma Johnson of Little Silver, N. J.

Although none of her children live nearby, Mrs. Caldwell is never lonely.

"There's never a day someone doesn't drop in," she said. "I have wonderful neighbors."

He lost tongue in fight but doc made new one

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — A man who lost one-third of his tongue in a barroom brawl can now talk and eat normally following an operation by a surgeon who used a laser to reshape the new tongue.

"He'll never be able to touch his nose," said Dr. Anthony Krausen, who reported on his success at a recent meeting of the American Academy of Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery in New Orleans. "But I don't know if he ever could."

Krausen said his patient, a 28-year-old student from the Middle East who was living in Milwaukee, got into the fight in a Pittsburgh tavern.

He lost the portion of his tongue from the tip to the band of tissue that attaches the tongue to the floor of the mouth. As a result, he had difficulty talking and was restricted to a soft, naushy diet.

The doctor said there was little in medical literature to aid him.

New amendments in railway benefits affect divorced spouses

Heartline is a service for senior citizens. Its purpose is to answer questions and solve problems. If you have a question or a problem not answered in these columns, write to Heartline, 114 East Dayton St., West Alexandria, Ohio 45381. You will receive a prompt reply, but you must include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. The most useful replies will be printed in this column.

HEARTLINE: My ex-husband and I were married for 13 years and I have not remarried. He is drawing Railroad Retirement benefits. I was just wondering if any of the amendments recently passed by President Reagan will benefit me at all.

Right now, as a divorced spouse, I am not eligible to draw any portion of my ex-husband's benefits. Is there a chance that this will change? H.T.

ANSWER: The new amendments will affect both spouses and divorced spouses. The changes are as follows:

The new law extends railroad retirement spouse benefits to the divorced wives of employees, if the divorced wife has not remarried, has attained age 62, was married to the employee for at least 10 years and the employee is age 62 or older.

Other eligibility requirements are the same as for spouses. The amount payable is limited to the tier I portion of an annuity, which is equal to what social security would pay and subject to offset if other railroad retirement or social security benefits also are payagle. The annuity terminates with the month the divorced wife remarries. A divorced wife is considered a qualified railroad retirement beneficiary for Medicare purposes.

The spouse tier II annuity portion is changed from 50 percent of the employee's tier II portion to 45 percent. However, the spouse maximum which previously set a limit on the amount of a spouse annuity, has been eliminated.

Tier II cost of living increases will be continued at the same rate as for employees (32.5 percent of the increase in the Consumer Price Index).

To conform with social security law, the spouse age reduction factor has been changed from 1/180 to 1/144 for each month the spouse is under age 65 when she or he elects to receive a reduced annuity (from a 20 percent reducation at age 62 to a 25 percent reducation).

If you feel that you may now qualify for any railroad benefit that was previously denied you and you inquire at a Railroad Retirement Board office, please be patient if your questions are not answered immediately. Remember that these changes are very new and that the personnel must have time to familiarize themselves with the changes.

HEARTLINE: I have just turned 65 and eligible for Medicare now. I have read your column for several years and have noticed that you have a book designed to help a person choose a good Medicare supplement insurance policy. How do I order it? J. D.

ANSWER: Simply send $1.75 to Heartline, Dept. H. I. 114 East Dayton St., West Alexandria, Ohio 45381.

HEARTLINE: I was born in a small southern town and to the best of my recollection, there was never the mention of a birth certificate having been issued for me.

I am approaching retirement age and am a little worried about proving my age to Social Security. I have heard that they will not accept a driver's license as proof of age. Could you tell me if there are any other documents or such that they will accept? K. S.

ANSWER: Of course, the best proof of age is a birth certificate or baptismal record filed within five years of your birth.

However, instead of these documents, if they are not available, Social Security will accept any combination of the following: school records, census records, Bible of other family records, religious record of confirmation in youth or early life, insurance policies, marriage records, employment records, labor union records, fraternal organizational records, military or voting records, delayed birth certificate, birth certificate of your child showing your age, physician's or midwife's record of birth, or passport.

HEARTLINE: I have heard that there is a national senior citizens organization that one can join that also makes all the services of Heartline available to the members. Is this true? K. L.

ANSWER: Yes. The name of the organization is the National Association of Older Americans. For all the details and membership information, write to Heartline—NAOA, 114 East Dayton St., West Alexandria, Ohio 45381. Please enclose a long, self addressed and stamped envelope.

Dear Abby

Wife wishes her husband would keep off the grass

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
© Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Most of our friends are in the 25- to 35-year-old age group, and although they are lovely people, they occasionally smoke marijuana (especially the husbands) as a casual recreation.

I've never approved of this, but I figure what people do is their own business. However, we have a new baby and I do not want her exposed to this — especially when she gets older.

I'm sure our friends will respect my wishes if I ask them not to smoke pot in our home. But I can't expect them to abstain when we are guests in THEIR homes.

To make matters worse, my husband sometime joins in the pot-smoking, although he never smokes it otherwise. This infuriates me because he knows I hate it. He claims he enjoys it once in a while, and it's harmless.

Do you see a solution here? Our friends are nice people and I'd hate to lose them over this issue.

— POT SHOT
IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR POT SHOT: Your biggest problem is persuading your husband to change his mind. Recent studies show that marijuana is NOT the "harmless" drug it was thought to be. If he's not willing to accept that, ask him to forgo that "enjoyment" as a favor to you. (Marriage is a series of trade-offs, you know.) And as for your lovely friends: Explain that you don't want to be where marijuana is being smoked, and if you lose their friendship, it won't be the first friendship that has gone up in smoke. (Or gone to pot.)

DEAR ABBY: For years I constantly complained about my health. I couldn't sleep, couldn't stay awake and was always taking pills. Then I discovered Recovery, Inc.! It's a wonderful organization and I'm sure it saved my life. This support group taught me specific techniques for handling sleeplessness, depression, nervousness, etc.

You would do your readers a wonderful service by telling them about Recovery, Inc. There are 1,000 groups in the U.S. and Canada.

— GRATEFUL AND FUNCTIONING

DEAR GRATEFUL: The organization you praise is everything you said it is.

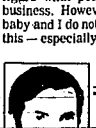
Literature is available by writing to Recovery, Inc., 116 South Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60603. It's non-profit, so please send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

DEAR ABBY: Our problem is a lady who sings so loudly in church that she drowns everybody else out.

She is a regular churchgoer and is getting up in years, so nobody wants to hurt her feelings by calling this to her attention, but I can tell you it sure doesn't make for very good listening. Suggestions? She gets louder every Sunday.

— ANOTHER CHURCHGOER

DEAR CHURCHGOER: The poor woman could be losing her hearing. However, she goes to church to pray, right? And so do you. So next Sunday, throw in an extra prayer for her, and practice the virtue of tolerance.



Dr. Lamb

Most bronchial asthma caused by allergy

By LAWRENCE LAMD, M.D.
Newspaper Enterprise Association

DEAR DR. LAMB — Would you please send me some information on bronchial asthma?

My husband, 49, who has never been ill, suddenly developed bronchial asthma. He has attacks that will last for a week or two. He goes to sleep, then in an hour's time he comes up gasping for air.

He has a good health record. His heart and blood pressure are all right. What causes these attacks? Will he get over having them? Can they be prevented?

DEAR READER — Most cases of asthma begin in childhood and are caused by an allergy, usually something external to the body.

These attacks are often called extrinsic asthma. A few cases are in response to something within the body, such as a respiratry infection and these are called intrinsic asthma.

It is important that your husband see a physician. He should be tested for possible allergies.

For example, he may be allergic to something in the bedroom that precipitates these attacks.

I note you live in Hawaii which reminds me that some geographic areas have substances that seem to cause asthma. The air pollution in the Tokyo-Yokahama area is well known to cause asthma in some people and the asthma disappears when the person leaves the area.

Desensitization and antihistaminics do not work as well for asthma as they often do for some other allergies, as explained in The Health Letter No. 8-6, Asthma, which I am sending you.

Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self addressed envelope for it to me in care of this newspaper, P. O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N. Y. 10019.

But there are lots of different medicines available now to help in the management of asthma.

Some new medicines, such as cromolyn sodium, can be used to help prevent attacks in some people. It has been particularly beneficial in enabling asthmatics to exercise without having attacks.

Incidentally, cold air inhaled during exercise appears to be a major factor in causing such attacks.

If your husband is merely having attacks related to an allergic substance he can avoid, he may be able to eliminate them entirely. Otherwise, most mild asthmatics can learn to manage the attacks or prevent them. Severe attacks require complicated medical management, usually in the hospital.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Four years ago I had a C-section done on me because of hemorrhaging. The doctor said I had a premature separation of the placenta. My C-section is a bikini one, across instead of up and down. The incision inside is also across like the incision on the outside.

Now I'm going to have my second baby. The doctors want me to have this baby by normal delivery.

I've heard that sometimes the C-section stitches burst when having another baby by a normal delivery. Is this true?

How will I know if they burst? Will I bleed and have pain? How will the doctor know? Please tell me what I might expect.

DEAR READER — Don't borrow trouble. Many women with a good normal scar, particularly the transverse type you have, are able to have a normal delivery with later pregnancies.

Of course, women who have tpo small a pelvis will always have an indication for a Cesarean delivery. A good scar will not rupture with normal delivery. Your doctors can tell what is going on by how strong your labor pains may need to be to accomplish the delivery and they can help if you should need it.

DEAR DR. LAMB — We are three friends who are having a hot argument about vitamins. One claims it is all in your head and they really don't help you.

Another claims that wheat germ, Vitamin C and E are the best vitamins for you. And the third claims that vitamins are the biggest ripoff of the century and people who buy them are a bunch of suckers.

We would like your opinion to settle this. Tell us what vitamins really are good for you and for your sex life.

DEAR READER — We'd better start with the understanding that we all need vitamins and they are all important. But you should get all you need from a well-balanced healthy diet.

If you can't or don't eat a regular balanced diet for any reason or have a medical problem that increases your need, then a vitamin supplement is important.

Any all-purpose one tablet a day usually does the job for healthy people.

Any humor in church bazaar?

BY ERMA BOMBECK
© Field, Enterprise, Inc.

There is a reason why more humor columns have not been written about the annual church Christmas bazaar.

It is because no one has ever been able to find humor in it.

As reluctant as I am to mention the word Christmas this early, this is the time the annual bazaars get into gear. They are staged to bring love and harmony through kind Christian deeds among the parishioners if the chairman has to bend a few faces on self-centered bodies to do it.

How are bazaar chairmen selected, you may ask. They are chosen from soft, matronly lumps of compassion who have the bad luck to go to the restroom while nominations are being made. When they return, it is to resounding applause and shouts of, "You'll make a wonderful chairman! If you need me, just call."

The voices are all unlisted.

For the next several months, the chairman must convince parishioners that "Blessed are those who say yes, for they could inherit not only the earth, but the whole stinking bazaar."

She must convince each one they have been researched and are chosen for basic talents and skills.

Lucille Fronk, Craftsy booth, whose husband has no desire whatsoever to get his car in the garage since last year when he ran over 185 bleach bottles being saved for piggy banks.

Evelyn Weiss, Pitch and Throw game, whose husband is an attorney and handled the lawsuit last year regarding the broken blackboard.

Sonya Flipper, Cake Walk chairman, who was overheard at a reception for the new minister to whisper, "If I couldn't bake a better cake than this, I'd sell my oven" and will never open her mouth again.

Dee Dee Dormat, Nursery, who is always pregnant—anyway—and assumed to love children when in fact she doesn't even love her husband.

Frances Firmwag, Telephone chairman, who is childless and has access to a phone.

Evaline Rumschussle, Antique Booth, because it takes one to know one.

Elaine Hensen, publicity, who once saved the life of a columnist who owes her.

Ah yes, one picture of a Christmas Bazaar chairman is worth 120 sermons.

Retirement should be time for getting serious about golf

By JACK V. FOX
United Press International

OXNARD, Calif. — I thought when I retired that I would really take up golf again. It's almost a religion for some retired men, and women, too, and has a way of refreshing the spirit as much as the body.

Certainly the opportunity was at hand. A bunch of guys from our mobile home park play every Monday and Friday. There are good public courses nearby and for senior citizens the green fees are reasonable.

The weather in southern California is such that you can play year round in nothing more than a light sweater. I can remember a time when I was so crazed by golf that a fanatic partner once persuaded me to go out in the Connecticut snow and hit red tennis balls around a course.

But something has taken away that fine madness. I have this heretical notion that there is something ridiculous about golf at my age. I was once told that it builds character. Well, I hit my first golf ball with a wood-shafted driver almost 50 years ago and I know for a fact that my character is much worse now than it was then.

I suppose the real trouble is that my game also is no better than it was at age 16. I have played a bit recently and on the bulletin board of our clubhouse my handicap is listed as a 29. If you don't know that that means, don't ask.

Actually, I think my problem goes back to the time when I played St. Andrews backwards. That was 30 years ago but it seems like yesterday.

We were living in London. I got a week off in March, took a train to Edinburgh, rented a car, drove to St. Andrews and walked into that hallowed clubhouse in the historical wake, so to speak, of fellow Americans Walter Hagen, Bobby Jones, Tommy Armour, Gene Sarazen and, later, Arnie Palmer and Jack Nicklaus.

They told me the course was closed. In the winter months, they explained, they let the fairway grass grow back untrammeled by human feet. My face fell but I must have lived up to British stiff upper lip standards. The manager said that since I was such a dedicated golfer and had come such a distance I might play the links on the left hand side.

What did that mean? Well, he said, you play to the 18th, 17th, 16th, 15th and diminishing greens and wind up on the first. That way you don't trod on the ordinary paths.

And so I set out, accompanied by a Scots caddy who could not have been less than 80. We marched through gorse and heather together. We withstood the gales from the Firth of Forth and blasted from bunkers the size of the Gobi desert. We had putts of more than 150 feet on greens that accomodate two holes. I hit one shot from the railroad siding track and it went between two grazing cows. We never destroyed a blade of grass on the normal paths because we were never there.

I don't know what I shot. Around 148 is reasonable. As we staggered toward the first green like comrades-in-arms, the lone survivors on a battlefield, the old Scotsman said to me: "Mr. Fox, I hae caddied here man and boy and you are the worst for which I hae carried."

With that, he clapped me on the shoulder and we retired to a pub where we drank Scotch and quoted Robbie Burns.

That scar of having blasphemed the cradle of golf, the WORST ever to have played there, could be why I can't pick the game up again.

There is one more reason. I have developed a shank. A shank is when you try to hit a short iron chip shot to the pin and it squirts off to the right. You try not to talk about it but you can't stop thinking about it.

But I have reached back into my Scottish lore and bought a cleek. A cleek is an ancient club, a putter with a lofted face and I am trying hitting it from anywhere up to 100 yards out. It's a little trick I learned from playing St. Andrews backwards.

Haircuts needed in three to four months

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) — A Cambridge hair-stylist says expensive, professional haircuts for women are needed only every three to four months.

"If hair is cut in proportion and balance, it will grow out that way and look good at any length," says John Mitchell, of Croppers salon.

Mitchell says simple, natural and easy-to-care-for cuts yield the best long-term results.

He also recommends shampooing at least once daily with a popular brand of baby shampoo.

As for styles, "The extra-long or wild and wooly looks are definitely out. And color, if it is used at all, is very subtle."

Braids are in, Mitchell says, the soft, easy type that keep hair back and give a neat appearance. For evening they may be draped loosely around the side of the head with a flower tucked into a braid or with tiny, artificial flowers intertwined with braids.

Far from the fashion centers, women model for second careers

By JEANNE LESEM
UPI Family Editor

Dianne Ely, an Albuquerque, N.M. housewife, models because "I enjoy it very much, it's nice to pick up extra money and it gives me time for my children," who are 6 and 9 years old.

Harriette Smith, 16, a Douglas, Ga. high school student, is a runway model and hasn't made up her mind about a career.

Eva Carr, 45, a registered nurse in Prince George, British Columbia, Canada, began runway modeling for small town stores "just for fun" and because she could get clothing discounts and gift certificates. Mrs. Carr, a nursing educator by day and mother of three grown children, is co-owner of a modeling school and teaches night classes there.

For every Brooke Shields and Shelley Hack, there are hundreds of women like Mrs. Ely, Mrs. Carr and Miss Smith. Most live far from New York City and other metropolitan areas that are centers for career modeling. Most study modeling and work at it for — among other things — fun or extra money or to gain poise and self-confidence.

Their reasons are as varied as the students themselves, says Nancy Bounds, outgoing president of the International Talent and Modeling School Association, whose members are independently owned firms.

Ms. Bounds, a former model herself, operates an Omaha, Neb.-based model school and agency chain with her husband, Mark Sconce.

"The attractive woman of 35 to 45 who wants to model will find chances almost everywhere but the city of New York," Ms. Bounds said in an interview during the association's annual convention in New York City. "The bulk of our bookings are for housewives, high school and college students.

"Every city in the world has advertisers who need models, from a tractor manufacturer in Omaha to young clothing designers in California.

"We don't just have beautiful people," she added. "We have children, grandparents, character people."

Ms. Bounds thinks the trend toward using young teen-aged models in sexually provocative ads and television commercials "is absolutely ridiculous and harmful to the girls."

Such ads and commercials, she said, "encourage girls who are too young to be thinking about sex to try to become sex objects."

She is highly critical of model agencies, designers and photographers who sanction the use of very young girl models for such ads. She said the trend is being discussed as far away as Milan and Tokyo, where a model agency recently asked her agency to send 14- and 15-year-olds on assignments.

Her answer was negative. "I told them we could send 17-year-olds, but only if they were well-chaperoned. They are setting a trend I truly believe must be stopped."

"If this trend continues," she said, "we're going to see nude 13-year-olds in Playboy in the next two or three years."

Not all children are looking for modeling careers.

Jenny Krajnik, 8, does fashion runway and photography modeling in Nampa, Idaho. She is a farmer's daughter whose present career choice is crop dusting.

Ms. Bounds said she had one student, a school teacher, who enrolled to gain self-confidence in front of her classes.

"One girl out of every 300 who comes to a modeling school will do something internationally," Ms. Bounds said. "You may have three people in an agency who earn their living by modeling alone — in all media.

"None of us could survive without self-improvement training," she added, recalling one client, an architectural firm, that sent a secretary to her modeling school. "She was just out of high school and 20 pounds overweight."

Modeling is one field in which men are second class citizens, she said. "Women models are much more in demand" and receive much higher pay, she said. "A top (female) model who is not a superstar will make as much money as a superstar male. You don't see men signing up with a network for $1 million."

At Mary Quinn Crump's modeling school in Waycross, Ga. (population, 20,000), students come mainly for self-improvement, Mrs. Crump said, "but I'm hoping to generate more interest in career modeling."

She described one of her best runway models as a girl who had had surgery to repair a hare lip.

"Entering a beauty contest gave her confidence money can't buy," Mrs. Crump added.

You have only to look at print advertisements and television commercials to realize that youth is a big factor in modeling. Which raises the question of what jobs besides character work are open to aging models.

Ms. Bounds said many go into designing for TV and the theater. Some go into the cosmetics industry or become designers assistants or coordinators of fashion shows, booking agents for models or jobbers who show fashion collections. Some become store buyers or open boutiques.

Equipment available to aid home patients

By HAROLD BLUMENFELD
Newspaper Enterprise Association

I recently had the unhappy experience of having to pick up a walker for a friend who had fractured her hip.

While I was at the surgical supply store, I became much more aware of the many appliances and aids designed to make patients more comfortable.

If a member of your family is about to be released from the hospital, you may be wondering — and perhaps even worrying — about what you'll have to do for him or her.

With a little common sense, some helpful hints and the use of specially designed conveniences — plus your tender, loving care — chances are that you and your patient will do well.

Before the patient leaves the hospital, check with his or her health team of physicians, nurses and physical or occupational therapists regarding the special care that may be needed.

Should the purchase or rental of medical equipment be required, visit your local surgical supply store. Experienced professionals there will advise you and recommend special aids.

Be sure to find out whether the purchase of rental will be covered by Medicare or Medicaid. Store personnel will often supply claim forms and help you to fill them out.

Make your home safer before the patient returns. Check the room or rooms that the person will use for any "roadblocks." Remove excess furniture and other objects; a small slippery rug could be a real hazard.

Tripping over a carelessly placed article could cause sufficient shock or injury to worsen the patient's condition.

Make the bedroom bright and cheerful, especially if the patient will be confined there for some time. This will boost his or her morale, which is important for recovery.

Consider the rental of a hospital bed. The adjustable height can simplify care and make the convalescent more comfortable. Particularly when sitting up. Side rails are available for all types of home or hospital beds to prevent the patient from falling out.

Personal hygiene is one of the greatest concerns for someone who is recovering from a serious illness or operation. Commodes are available for the patient who is able to leave the bed but cannot use the bathroom.

They combine the comfort and familiarity of a regular toilet seat with safety and convenience. There are different types to suit individual situations.

We are all familiar with wheelchairs. But I did not realize before that it might be difficult to move from a wheelchair to a regular chair. I found out that a "transfer board" can make this movement easier and safer.

Convalescents often need what are known as "ambulatory aids" such as walkers, crutches and canes. Each type requires a difference physical effort and each gives a different degree of balance and support.

I learned that there are folding walkers than can be carried in the car and tucked out of sight when not in use.

Hand grips are an important feature to look for on these aides. Various models come with special adjustable handgrips that are designed to distribute the patient's weight evenly and thus to make their use easier and more comfortable.

There are many other aids, such as exercise mats, slant boards, portable massage tables, bicycles, rowing machines, whirlpool baths, treadmills and support garments. Most can be rented.

This equipment is explained in the free illustrated booklets offered by most surgical supply stores. Don't hesitate to ask questions of store personnel about your patient's specific needs.

No funds for bus so pupils study by mail

PRAIRIE CITY, Ore. (UPI) — In the remote mountain hamlet of Granite, two dozen students are getting their schooling this fall by correspondence course because there is no money for a bus.

Twenty-one youngsters are taking classes from the Calvert Correspondence School of Baltimore, and the rest are enrolled in the Portland State University Continuing Education Division.

The children were assigned homework by Prairie City District because the tiny, money-strapped system could no longer afford to run buses over 50 miles and three summits to the isolated, mountainous community.

The Calvert course costs the district only $250 to $375 a student, but School Superintendent Paul Butcher foresees problems.

"It requires a lot of maturity by the students and their parents' assistance," he said.

The at-home scholars are hurt by the lack of contact with their peers — a problem aggravated by Granite being one of the few remaining rural communities in Oregon without telephone service. Granite is 250 miles southeast of Portland.

"The advantages to this setup," Butcher said, having to pause to think, "is it forces children and parents to work together and, in some instances, become closer to each other."

But in other cases, he admitted, parents can't stand the "strain" of having their children at home.

A few parents appear to be thriving on the home-school arrangement, including one mother who said she "learned as much as her children did" in studying the lessons, Butcher said.

Others want to get their kids sent back to Prairie City. Soon.

Several parents are trying to improvise a transportation pool system and the district has agreed to provide a bus if they'll get a driver and buy the gas. But the idea is only in the talking stage.

Some families have tried to enroll their children in Baker County on the east slope of the Blue Mountains, and another shipped a daughter off to relatives in Arizona for schooling.

"Many of them are facing some pretty sad choices, there's no doubt about that," Butcher said. "I don't see any honest hope that we can supply bus service to them this year."

The money crisis occurred after voters refused to pass a levy for the 230-student district in June.

"People here aren't used to passing levies because for years it was unnecessary to have them" because of timber income, said Butcher.

Conference on aging scheduled Nov. 30

By LOU COTTIN
Newspaper Enterprise Association

We haven't heard much lately about the upcoming White House Conference on Aging. So we will bring you up to date.

David Rust was recently appointed executive director of the conference, which will take place from Nov. 30 to Dec. 4.

Rust inherited from his predecessors in the Carter administration the 10 targeted issues to be addressed at the conference. These are:

1. Family, social services and other support systems.
2. Governmental structures for the aging.
3. Housing, transportation and physical environment.
4. Older Americans as a growing national resource.
5. Older Americans in a changing economy.
6. Physical and mental health.
7. Research.
8. Retirement income.
9. Social and health aspects of long-term care.
10. Special issues facing minorities.

Now comes the elected California delegation to the White House conference to demand an 11th targeted subject: the conditions of older women.

The effort to include this topic on the agenda has been led by the Older Women's League, which started in California and has grown to 42 chapters across the country.

The league support its position by citing these statistics on older women in the United States:

- 85 percent of all surviving spouses are female.
- 50 percent of all women 75 or older live alone. (Only 21 percent of the men in that age group live alone.)
- 72 percent of the elderly poor are women.
- 60 percent of all widows are poor.
- Three times as many older women as older men live in nursing homes.

These are some of the conditions the league is eager to bring to the attention of the conference. The organization has called upon delegates throughout the country to insist that the agenda be made more specific on this issue. If you agree, there are two thing to do:

1. Write to the Older Women's League, 800 Harrison St., Oakland, Calif, 94611. Ask for more data about the problems of older women.

2. Circulate petitions declaring that older women deserve special attention at the conference. Specifically, the petition should support the California delegation's request for "Policy Issue No XI: Older Women" as the 11th targeted subject.)

Send the completed petitions — as well as other suggestions for improving the conference to: David Rust, Executive Director, White House Conference on Aging, 330 Independence Avenue, S. W., Washington, D.C. 20201.

Yes there's still time.

Health hazards in offices, too

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Health Editor

Good fits in hardhats, spacesuits, safety shoes and even office chairs made a a New York fashion parade for working women the other day.

The latest look in protective clothing and work environments (proper air, chairs and lights) free of health hazards was was put together by Dr. Jeanne M. Stellman, head of the Women's Occupational Health Resources Center at Columbia University's School of Public Health.

The show opened a national conference — "Working Women: Designs for Workplace Health."

The conference focused on hazards connected with use of video display terminals and photocopying machines, among others, in the white collar field.

Then there were the hazards for women toiling in mines, training to be astronauts, or working in heavy industry. Obvious hazards.

Stellman said, however, in traditional women's fields — clerical, household, nursing — often face hidden hazards from, among other things, chemical exposure.

From the secretary who breathes fumes from photocopying machines to the heavy equipment operator who cannot find work gloves to fit her, working women face a variety of health and safety problems on the job, she said.

Model work environments at the conference came complete with demonstrations of what safe and healthy workplaces should look like. Participants got to try out an automatic pipetter in the model clinical laboratory. This prevents dangerous mouth pipetting.

In the hospital display visitors could have themselves lifted by a device designed to prevent back injuries to hospital personnel lifting patients.

In the model artist's studio, an artist demonstrated safe silk screening techniques and were told how to prevent chemical exposure.

Other model work environments covered jobs in meat wrapping, retail sales, households and sewing and stitching.

In a "Clerical Factpack" put together by Stellman and available at the conference, threats to health among office workers were cited. They ranged from poor air to fumes from copying machines, stress and muscular fatigue from poorly designed chairs or offices themselves.

The potential hazards included eye strain, stress and fatigue among users of video display terminals — cathode ray tubes that are called computer terminals and widely used by workers in banks, for airlines, newspapers, insurance companies, hospitals, and even in schools.

"But the jury's still out on the VDTs," Stellman was told by a visitor.

"Only in the United States," she said. "In Europe, where the hazards are known, workers are not subjected to the eye fatigue, for one."

Stellman said it is essential to have adjustable video display terminals so a user can angle the terminal to reduce glare.

"Proper lighting also is essential to prevent severe eye strain."

She said most offices are overlighted for VDT users.

"The VDT requires subdued lighting," she said. "You need separate and adjustable light sources, as well as an adjustable screen. A good light source may not be good focused on the VDT but you need such a source to illuminate material being copied."

Persons who wear glasses, claims Spellman, can't just depend on the regular type to work at the VDT the way they would for other reading tasks.

She said in Europe there are, for example, CRT trifocals which best protect the eyes from excessive strain.

Journalists and others who use the VDT or CRT in their work occasionally but not continuously cannot be put in the same class with clerical workers who must be at the VDTs continuously, claims Stellman.

"What the VDT has done is turn many clerical jobs to factory jobs," Stellman said. "People just sit their all day."

In a report on indoor air pollution in offices, Stellman, makes these points:

—Architects talk about controlled environments but it turns out that the air inside may be more polluted than the air outside. This presents a particular hazard for office workers.

—A recent study in a new, hermetically sealed building — the kind with windows that cannot be opened — found conditions that were so irritating the office workers had to be moved to temporary quarters while the building was unsealed and ventilation improved. Workers had complained of headaches, lightheadedness, irritation of the eyes, ears, nose and throat. No particular chemical could be identified as the culprit.

It was found, however, that ventilation in the building provided less than one-half the recommended air flow. (Indoor pollution experts claim the problem is not rare these days as building owners cut back on air exchanges to save fuel needed by motors running ventilating systems.)

—Sources of indoor pollution include chemicals used in copying machines, cigarette smoke.

About poor ventilation in offices, Stellman reported:

"The air flow may be too slow and ducts and openings poorly distributed. Replacement air may be insufficient or even dirty, and, of course, few people are near a window that can be opened.

"The ventilating ducts themselves may be contaminated with chemical dust.

"Asbestos dust from insulation is the most dangerous. These microscopic dust particles can be inhaled deep into the chest, where they can lead to disease."

Suicide linked to economy

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — A coroner said economic hard times are partially responsible for a record 13 suicides in a two-week period in Jefferson County.

Up to 30 percent of the suicides during the period were related to economic factors, county coroner Richard Greathouse said Tuesday. The county has lost 30,000 manufacturing jobs since 1974 and has a 7.4 percent jobless rate.

Greathouse, whose office investigates all suicides, said the economy "has some input — there's no question about it" on the suicide rate.

"The economy — with the way things are going and many of our social support systems going out the window Oct. 1 (with federal budget cuts) — a lot of people are afraid of facing the future without jobs or money."

The 13 suicides reported from Sept. 9-23 represented the highest number in any two-week period in populous Jefferson County.

The economic factors involved in some of the recent suicides included lack of money, loss of job and problems with existing employment, Greathouse said.

According to Greathouse, the recent surge of 13 suicides "could be a spurt or an indication of pending increase."

House that Jackie built secluded from public

MARTHA'S VINEYARD, Mass. (UPI) — Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, one of the world's most famous women, has a new $3.1 million island hideaway where she can spend the summers secluded from the glare of publicity.

The oceanside Martha's Vineyard land where she built her cedar-shingled house, barn and silo is considered "unique in all the world," a place where Leif Ericson once walked 1,000 years ago, said building inspector Zachary Zandler.

Zandler certified the secluded, three-story traditional Cape Cod home "liveable" in June.

"There's no other place like it. The vegetation and the mixture of plants — it's all small scale, almost like a type of bonzai. It has incredible rocks, wildlife and fresh water ponds," he said.

The much-talked about complex — visible neither from the road nor the beach — sits on Squibnocket Pond in Gay Head, a sparsely populated community on the western tip of Martha's Vineyard.

The 10,000 people who live year-round on the 13-by-21-mile island 30 miles off the coast of Cape Cod seem indifferent to the arrival of another summertime celebrity.

"For us, it's not unusual to see Jackie at the fair or Walter Cronkite on his bike or Carly Simon or Beverly Sills at the A & P," said Chamber of Commerce spokeswoman Joann Walker. "They don't dress any different or act any different than anyone else."

Mrs. Onassis, who spends much of the year trying to lose herself in the crowds of New York City where she works at a publishing house, assured the town's 150 year-round residents she intended to make her home as unobtrusive as possible.

"Even Clark Kent couldn't see this house from the road," Hugh Jacobsen, her Washington, D.C., architect, told Gay Head selectmen.

Mrs. Onassis paid the Hornblower family $1,110,000 in 1978 for 276 acres of Gay Head land teeming with lush vegetation, crystal clear ponds, and stretches of rock-studded beaches tucked into jagged clay cliffs.

For those who do get a look, the house is indeed worth seeing. Mrs. Onassis, one of the world's wealthiest women, has always been known for her exquisite — and expensive — taste.

When she became first lady in 1961, she embarked on a massive restoration of the White House, and then gave the American public a glimpse of the first family's home on national television.

Those involved with the Gay Head project are reluctant to reveal its building costs, but several sources have placed it at over $2 million.

The complex consists of a main house, a barn-like guest house, a two-car detached garage, and tennis courts. The landscape has been left in its natural state.

Cedar shingles cover the sides and roofs of the house, barn and garage, which all have white trim and old style New England shutters.

The main house has a living room, a family room, five bathrooms, three bedrooms, and two fireplaces. The main windows are what builders call "12 over 12s" — a dozen rectangular panels divided by wooden frames on top and another dozen panels below, a style traditional for Cape Cod homes.

"The view is disguised so that you don't get the full impact of the ocean view until you are in her living room, which is all white — the walls, the floor, the fireplace and even the chimney," Zandler said.

The floors are bleached oak. "They have some sort of whitewash on them," he said.

The kitchen is equipped with a 16-burner Vulcan stove, pantry, double sink, dishwasher and laundry room.

A mammoth butcher block chopping table takes up a large part of the kitchen, said Maggie Putnam, a Gay Head resident. "You have to detour around it to get across the room," she said.

All the bathrooms have white American Standard appliances and electrically heated towel bars.

"They are stainless steel bars hidden in the wall. The heat comes through the wall and warms the whole towel. The only place that makes them is in New York," said a source who asked not to be named.

The main house has a full basement which apparently will be used for storage.

The two-story guest house has three skylights, two bedrooms, four bathrooms, a kitchen, living room and an attached silo.

"The guest house was built to look like it was a barn," Zandler said. "The silo is mainly for looks. It has a winding stairway with windows and a reading room at the top."

A wraparound patio complete with an outside wet bar adjoins two sides of the main house. The deck furniture is modern white tubing with azure blue cushions.

Jim Leroux, who owns a Vineyard Haven jeans shop as well as the dry wall firm that worked on Mrs. Onassis' home, described the complex as "a nice addition to the island."

"I think it's a nice house and tastefully done," Leroux said. "But now she deserves the privacy she's tried to capture."

His partner, Mark Ellis, agreed, saying Mrs. Onassis "should be left to herself."

"The house itself is not that unusual, except that it's very big. The view is magnificent," Ellis said.

Zandler said he never met Mrs. Onassis but dealt exclusively with Alexander Forger, her trustee and attorney, and Anne Wallace, a Vineyard resident who described herself as "a go-between in the project."

Both stressed Mrs. Onassis' desire to enjoy her home in privacy.

"She's very happy here and just wants her own space and privacy," Mrs. Wallace said.

"It's a private house, not a public house, and she wants to keep it that way," Forger said from his New York office.

Gay Head tax collector Maysel Vanderhoop said the town will collect no taxes from Mrs. Onassis until 1982.

"We assess Jan. 1 through Dec. 31. As of last Jan. 1, the house was uninhabitable, so the first of next year we will assess it and she will begin paying taxes," Mrs. Vanderhoop said. "That's how most Massachusetts towns do it."

"Next year will be the first time we have assessed property at 100 percent, which we had to do because we don't have that many year round residents," he said.

Real estate agent Peggy Hall said Mrs. Onassis' complex had raised land values in Gay Head, but otherwise no one had paid much attention to the luxurious estate.

"Everybody's happy as long as she doesn't make too much noise."

"It's a beautiful piece of land, and some folks were sorry to see it sold," said Mrs. Vanderhoop. "There was some excitement at first and a lot of cars around. That was a nuisance. But I think most people would rather see it go to one person than to developers. We don't want to see a lot of kooks walking around."

Residents who waged a successful "stop McDonalds" campaign in 1979 are quick to discourage curious onlookers from trying to get a closer look at the celebrities who call the island home, at least for part of the year.

But they aren't always successful.

Betty Haynes, who delivers mail when she's not running the cash register at the West Tisbury General Store, said people stop her constantly on her Gay Head mail route asking her to point out "Jackie's house."

"They ask me which driveway is hers, but all I tell them is she lives in Gay Head," she shrugged. "She gets her mail at a post office box, anyway."

James Regan, 77, who prunes the petunias, impatiens, mums and asters that adorn the lawn of Vineyard Haven's post office, said there was a lot of curiosity about Mrs. Onassis.

"When people see her, it becomes an event. But I'd much rather do this than concern myself with her comings and goings," he said as he untwirled a stubborn weed from the stem of a fledgling petunia.

Most Vineyard residents have learned to tolerate, and, in many cases, depend on the annual May-September invasion of tourists and summer residents who stream from the gangplanks of the ferry that runs between the island and the mainland.

"Guests welcome" signs hang in the front windows of homeowners willing to rent our spare bedrooms to visitors daring enough to bring their overnight bags without reservations.

The Martha's Vineyard Chamber of Commerce, which shares its building with a health food store, estimates the day-trippers and weekenders swell the island's summer population to 70,000.

Tourists armed with cameras and credit cards make a crucial difference to the dozens of small, family run businesses whose winter survival depends on a lucrative summer season.

Many of the year-round residents in Mrs. Onassis' neighborhood are descendants of the Wampanoag Indians.

Gladys Widdiss, 67, who heads the Wampanoag Tribal Council, said a federal lawsuit attempting to reclaim sections of Gay Head common lands and beaches has no connection with Mrs. Onassis' presence.

"Her land is not included in the area involved in the lawsuit, which was filed in 1974," said the grandmother, who had just returned from gathering wild grapes.

Generic drugs are cheaper

By HAROLD BLUMENFELD
Newspaper Enterprise Association

Costs are rising for just about everything we do or use in everyday life — and especially for health care.

We in the aging population spend a higher percentage of our income on health care than does any other age group.

We can save money on some prescription drugs by asking the doctor to prescribe them by their generic names.

My friendly neighborhood pharmacist tells me that several hundred generic drugs are on the market. Other drugs will not be available to their generic names until their patents run out.

Sometimes five or six brands of the same prescription drug are sold by varying prices by different pharmaceutical companies. Don't hesitate to ask your doctor whether the medication he or she is prescribing can be obtained less expensively.

But how about the over-the-counter drugs that both young and old spend sizable sums on each year?

How do we consumers, standing baffled before a drugstore counter stocked with similar-cure packages by different companies, know which to choose for what ails us?

How do we know which brand is the best value? Or which are effective and safe?

Fortunately, there has recently appeared a valuable book "Wigder's Guide to Over-the-Counter Drugs" (J.P. Tarcher Inc., distributed by St. Martin's Press, New York, $10).

The author is Dr. H. Neil Wigder, associate director of the emergency-medicine department at Christ Hospital in Oak Lawn, Ill.

He is a member of the American Medical Association, the American College of Emergency Physicians and the University Association for Emergency Medicine.

The book is easy to read but filled with facts. It contains critical comparison of effectiveness (evaluations of advertisers' claims), safety (rundowns on side effects, interactions and contraindications) and cost (comparisons of retail drug prices).

Did you know, for instance, that over-the-counter drugs may contain ingredients not proven safe or effective by the Food and Drug Administration?

Or that some special-"night-time" drugs are merely the regular drugs with caffeine removed?

Or that many "added-ingredient" drugs contain so little of those added ingredients as to make essentially no difference?

Or that aspirin products with the same ingredients may vary in price by as much as 300 percent?

Wigder covers a vast variety of over-the-counter drugs in such categories as adult pain and fever medications, children's pain and fever medications (handy when your grandchildren are visiting), cough medicines, weight-loss drugs, laxatives, nausea, vomiting and motion-sickness drugs, antacids, allergy medications, drugs for cold and sinus, sore throat preparations, sleeping pills, stimulants, tranquilizers, medications for cuts and abrasions and so on.

Wigder warns that it is essential to consult your physician before beginning to take any medication, whether prescription or over-the-counter, to ascertain if it may be harmful to you.

And he advises to always follow your own doctor's recommendations.

$11 million refunded for Olympic ban

NEW YORK (UPI) — It was enough to make a grown man cry. And E. Wallace Lawrence did just that.

The travel agency president mailed out $11 million in refunds Tuesday to thousands of people who canceled trips to Moscow when the U.S. boycotted the 1980 Summer Olympic Games.

"I must say that as a businessman I have a tear in my eye sending out $11 million," said Lawrence, of the Russian Travel Bureau, the general sales agent for the games.

The refunds were made under an arrangement between the U.S. Olympic Committee and the RTB and approved by a federal court earlier this month.

The deposits have been under the jurisdiction of U.S. District Court in Manhattan for the 21 months since the United States said it would boycott the games because of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

More than 11,000 people paid deposits of $1,650 or $2,000 for two- or three-week stays at the Olympics. Only 963 Americans attended the games, Lawrence said.

The 6,800 depositors who canceled their tickets before March 1, 1980 will receive 97 percent of the deposit. Those who canceled after that date will receive 75 percent of their deposit, Lawrence said.

As if the refunds were not enough, Lawrence also lost any chance to make a profit from the tours.

Refugees offered U.S. jobs

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — An Italian pastry chef who came to America 22 years ago as a refugee read of the plight of Polish refugees in Austria and, seeking to help them, said "Let them bake cake."

Ugo Mamolo, now a U.S. citizen and co-owner of a bakery, read a newspaper article telling the story of a Polish baker who is one of more than 40,000 Poles being housed in Austrian refugee camps.

Mamolo, recalling his days as a refugee and his need for experienced bakers, sent a cable to the Austrian government Tuesday offering airline tickets, lodging and jobs to 15 refugee bakers.

"I am a refugee myself," Mamolo said. "I came here from Trieste 22 years ago. I feel very bad for the poor people there who have to leave everything behind.

"I know how these people must feel over there. The best thing to do is put them to work. I came here, found a job, grew and now have four bakeries."

After reading the newspaper article about a 26-year-old refugee baker named "Mr. Andrzej," Mamolo asked a friend to send a cable for him to Andrzej, known only by his Christian name.

He also asked the friend to send a copy to Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky.

"There is a big need for bakers here, and there are people over there waiting for a job offer," Mamolo said. "We can find jobs for as many bakers as they can ship over."

Mamolo emphasized that the emigres would not be replacing jobs for U.S. citizens. He said the bakery placed a "help wanted" advertisement in a local newspaper for bakers, but received no responses.

Having some help around the shop would make it easier not only for him but for the rest of the bakers too, he said. His best — and most overworked — chefs are those turning out the "European type of goodies," and there are not enough qualified bakers to fill the areas sweet tooth.

"The only question that is open is whether they will find 14 other bakers."

Researchers using new strategy in their fight against smoking

By SALLY SQUIRES
© Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — Anti-smoking researchers are switching strategies in their fight against cigarettes.

Gone are the scare tactics. Now the idea is to teach non-smokers, particularly children, how to resist the temptation to smoke, and to arm smokers with psychological tools that help them give up cigarettes for good.

The battle is far from over, but the researchers say some results look promising.

Anti-smoking campaigns in schools, once rarely successful, now are having better luck when they concentrate on the immediate effects of smoking and teach youngsters how to refuse cigarettes. Other studies are suggesting ways to help long-term adult smokers who have tried, but failed, to quit smoking.

This is a far cry from the days when the main tactic was to try to inspire fear and guilt in smokers.

"We used to say, 'Here's a slice of a cancerous lung, this is what is going to happen to you,'" says Caterine Bell, director of the National Cancer Institute's anti-smoking program.

But as Dr. Richard Evans, chief of the social psychological behavioral medicine group at Baylor Medical College in Houston, puts it: "In dealing with preventing or influencing lifestyle, fear is not enough in the long run; fear is not the total answer."

Evans, a psychologist who has just completed a three-year smoking study of 3,330 junior high school students in Houston, suggests that past anti-smoking campaigns failed because they were too future-oriented. "Teens are more likely to operate in the present," he says.

For instance, studies show that most seventh grade students believe cigarette smoking is dangerous to their health. "Between the ages of 4 and 11, children even attempt to persuade their parents to quit smoking," Evans says in a report on his study published in the Journal of Applied Psychology.

Yet by the time they are 12 years old, he says, about 47 percent of youngsters manage to rationalize the adverse effects of cigarettes and begin smoking.

For an estimated 6 percent of these junior high school children, smoking will become a lifelong habit. But the other students who experiment with cigarettes are borderline smokers — students who can be influenced either to smoke or to resist cigarettes, depending on the influence of peers and family members.

This is the group Evans and other anti-smoking researchers would like to help. "The thing that has to be remembered here," he says, "is that controlling smoking in the seventh grade is not the issue. It's to delay the onset of addictive smoking. Very little smoking begins after the age of 18 years now."

Researchers also hypothesize that smoking is a ticket to other harmful behavior. "One study in England suggests that if students start smoking, they will be much more likely to start drinking and using drugs," Evans says. "Once they take one risk, they may be much more likely to take others."

But bombarded by cigarette ads appealing to their desire to be more attractive, and surrounded by peers and family members who smoke, children and teen-agers can find it difficult to refuse cigarettes.

"Modeling is a very, very important aspect in this," Evans says. "There's significantly more smoking in junior high schools attached to senior high schools."

Students are also more susceptible to smoking if family members use cigarettes. "The ones most likely to smoke are the ones who have parents that smoke," Evans says. "And there's four times the chance of smoking if both parents and an older sibling smoke."

To counteract these odds, Evans and his colleagues developed an intervention program that concentrates on the immediate effects of smoking.

Using a new test that measures nicotine levels in saliva, Evans was able to show students some of the early results of smoking. "This served a twofold purpose," he says. "It shows the immediate physiological symptoms and if made students more likely to tell the truth about their smoking habits."

The nicotine test was combined with films demonstrating ways to resist peer pressure. "We tried to learn how those who didn't smoke resisted," Evans says. "Kids who say no sometimes tell friends, 'The coach says I shouldn't smoke.'" Others told peers they had an allergy.

In some cases, when pressed, they took the offensive. "I thought you were a friend of mine," one student said. "Why are you trying to have me get cancer?"

"We tried to make a hero out of those who resisted smoking," Evans says. "The idea is to create a climate in which it is sort of 'out' to smoke."

That strategy seems to work. Evans reports that at the end of the eighth and ninth grades, students in the experimental groups smoked less frequently and intended to smoke less often than those in control groups who hadn't had the benefit of the full intervention program.

Scientists also are looking for new ways to help the long-term adult smoker kick the habit.

Recent studies conducted by psychologist Gep Colletti of the State University of New York at Binghamton suggest smokers trying to quit are more successful when they are taught to view a slip as a learning experience rather than as a major failure.

Those who choose to quit smoking go through stages recently classified by Dr. Carlo DiClemente, a psychologist at the Texas Research Institute of Mental Sciences in Houston.

"Smoking cessation is not an all-or-none phenomenon," DiClemente reported at a recent American Psychological Association convention in Los Angeles, "but it appears to follow distinct and separate stages."

Those stages, as coined by DiClemente and his colleague Dr. Jim Prochaska at the University of Rhode Island, begin with contemplation — a stage where smokers toy with the idea of quitting within the next 12 months — and progress to the decision to quit.

"Seventy to 80 percent of the 30 million Americans who quit in the decade right after the 1964 (surgeon general's) report stopped smoking on their own, without the help of formalized treatment," DiClemente said. "Yet we know very little about what these individuals do to change their smoking habits and what variables would predict the maintenance of that change."

Preliminary studies by DiClemente and other researchers suggest that self-efficacy — a person's judgment of what he or she can do in a certain situation — is a key to determining who will be successful in quitting for good.

In several studies conducted in Texas, at the University of Rhode Island and at the University of California at Los Angeles, questionnaires designed to measure self-efficacy among subjects who were trying to kick the habit accurately predicted which of them would succeed. But more important, data from the questionnaires suggested what types of situations were most likely to cause relapsers to start smoking again.

Such information, researchers believe, will be helpful in tailoring smoking cessation program

Area youths enrolled in medic study

MOSCOW — Nineteen students are enrolled in the cooperative medical education program at the University of Idaho.

After completing one year of study, students from Washington, Alaska, Montana and Idaho, will transfer to University of Washington Medical School for the remaining two years, returning to their home state at intervals for supervised experience in various clinical facilities.

The program creates more space at the crowded Seattle medical school. Each state is guaranteed a number of spaces for medical students each year.

Area students enrolled are Clinton L. Dille, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Dille, Lisa Savage Florence, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Savage, all of Kimberly, and John F. Forbes, son of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Forbes of Twin Falls.

Pros, cons of 2nd ambulance firm debated

By MARTY TRILLHASSE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — More than 130 people turned out Wednesday for a meeting billed as a discussion of free enterprise in the ambulance business.

The meeting, staged by self-described proponents of a second ambulance operation in Twin Falls County, brought forth no new arguments on either side.

The proponents repeated their contention that competition between the established Magic Valley Emergency Service and the proposed Twin Falls Emergency Medical Services operation would stimulate improved service in the community.

Opponents countered that the local market would not support two ambulance companies and warned of "ambulance wars" and increased user costs.

Those arguments could have an impact on the three-member county commission, which is considering whether to grant TFEMS owner and operator Dennis Brodigan an operating license. A decision is expected early next week.

Dr. Carl Bontrager, who works in the Magic Valley Memorial Hospital emergency room, addressed the group, saying competition will improve ambulance care, where training programs and government regulations won't.

"What we need is some type of a stimulus," he said. "Competition will provide that stimulus."

Brodigan said his experience in ambulance operations in Arizona demonstrated competition can improve ambulance service.

Such competition "kept us on our toes. It stimulated our improvements," he said. "Competition will keep me on my toes when I get a license."

But Jay Pace, a former ambulance operator in Ada and Canyon counties, said his experience with competition in limited markets proved financially disastrous.

"I would like to say I've been in an ambulance war. You are in Round 2 of an ambulance war," he said.

Calvin Edwards, the manager of MVES, said competition could wreck emergency care in the area. While Edwards expressed confidence that his operation could "outlast" TFEMS, he said a second ambulance company could lead him to reduce his level of service in order to survive. He said the local market is not overly profitable for one ambulance operation.

"If we don't make it, and the other system doesn't make it, and the county has to come up with more revenues, I'll come back and tell you I told you so," he said.

In a related matter, Dr. Ed Gallagher, the state's health officer, said Department of Health and Welfare officials will meet with Twin Falls County Prosecutor Harry DeHaan before deciding whether to proceed against MVES on possible violations of state regulations.

Tuesday, DeHaan announced he would not prosecute MVES or its owner, county Coroner Cloyce Edwards, because the alleged violations did not "rise to the level of crime." The allegations, stemming from a nine-month investigation of the ambulance service, charge Edwards with, among other things, using unlicensed ambulance units and uncertified attendants.

Although local action has been ruled out, state DHW officials retain the authority to pursue alleged state code violations through a license revocation proceeding.

"Once we are able to consider and review his (DeHaan) rationale and discuss with him his considerations for not pursuing it on a local level, we'll be better able to determine what our position will be at the state level," Gallagher said.

Battling botulism

Rare disease nearly killed Ketchum man

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

KETCHUM — Tom Marlow, a Ketchum construction worker, fought a battle with one of the world's deadliest poisons — and won.

A bout with botulism kept him completely paralyzed for three weeks and put him on a respirator for nearly three months.

This week, he hopes to return home, although he must continue to undergo physical therapy to fully recover.

The botulism was caused by improperly canned trout, something that concerned the South Central District Health Department, which tries to educate the public on canning techniques.

Botulism is not common; only 31 cases and 16 deaths from botulism have been recorded in Idaho from 1899 to 1977. But it is a deadly disease, killing up to 16 percent of its victims, according to national statistics. It is usually associated with home-canned foods.

Upon hearing an update on Marlow's condition at a recent board meeting, a board member reported seeing persons catching trout and canning them immediately, using camper trailer stoves.

The board member said he warned the persons that pressure cookers were needed to can fish and that camper stoves may not produce the heat necessary to kill the spores of Clostridium botulinum, the bacteria that produces the botulism toxin.

He was even more alarmed to find the persons knew of Marlow's condition, yet were not taking proper precautions.

As Alan Biermann, district environmental health specialist, pointed out the botulism bacteria is very common. Its spores are highly resistant to heat and can grow without oxygen.

The trick in preventing botulism is not necessarily keeping the bacteria out, but killing it once it gets in, Biermann said.

Low-acid food, such as peas, beans, corn, meat and fish, are particularly susceptible to the bacteria, which does not thrive in a high-acid medium.

Fruits and vegetables high in acidity and are less likely to cause botulism.

If spores are not killed off — and they can survive boiling at 212 degrees F. for one hour — they may begin to grow and produce their deadly toxin.

Sullivan charges dropped

DeHaan decides shooting justified

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Four days after her arrest on suspicion of second-degree murder, 28-year-old Donna Rae Sullivan emerged Wednesday from jail a free woman.

Based on evidence uncovered during the previous 24 hours, county Prosecutor Harry DeHaan moved to dismiss all charges against the Twin Falls woman in connection with the shooting and killing of 30-year-old Wesley Vic Fisher.

In making that move, DeHaan determined the defendant acted on a well-founded fear of bodily injury.

Fisher was killed instantly late Saturday when Sullivan shot him through the chest with a 12-gauge shotgun.

Since Monday, a series of legal maneuvers indicated that prosecutors and police rapidly were uncovering evidence, including a documented history of Fisher beating the defendant, which indicated Sullivan may have acted in self-defense.

Monday, Sullivan's lawyer, Greg Fuller, employed an unusual tactic by delaying his client's arraignment in 5th District Magistrate Court.

By the time Sullivan appeared in court Tuesday, prosecutors had decided to file voluntary manslaughter charges.

After the arraignment, in what Fuller later described as a "gamble," he allowed prosecutors and police detectives to interview his client.

At that point, DeHaan already was acknowledging the possibility that charges against the woman would be dropped. He said charges were filed before the investigation was complete because Sullivan previously had declined to talk to police.

Announcing his decision Wednesday at a press conference, DeHaan said police had verified the defendant's story and concluded "her actions

Idaho Frozen Foods may still build own sewer

TWIN FALLS — City Council and Idaho Frozen Foods officials met informally Wednesday in an effort to resolve concerns about the city's sewage treatment system.

IFF Manager Lee Odenwald told council IFF remains determined to withdraw from the Twin Falls sewage system unless new options are devised concerning IFF's use of the treatment facility.

Odenwald said IFF did not wish to be in an "adversary situation" with the city, and that the company's policy was to work with local communities.

However, he said, IFF is better off financially to invest $2 million to $2.5 million into building its own waste treatment system, rather than continue to pay an annual $700,000 user's fee under the waste limits set by the city.

Upon questioning from council members, Odenwald said the company had not passed the "point of no return" on its decision. He said he was open to new proposals from the city. He said a final decision by IFF would be made in the next 2 to 2½ months.

Odenwald said the company has an option on land in Twin Falls County for waste disposal and engineering firms are completing feasibility studies on a treatment facility. IFF first indicated it was considering withdrawing from the system last spring.

City Manager Tom Courtney told the Times-News fees charged to IFF reflected the IFF's high utilization levels. He said 62 to 70 percent of the waste received at the plant came from IFF.

Courtney said if IFF use fees were lowered, other users would pay increased fees.

Odenwald told council that because IFF must increase production to survive commercially, the Twin Falls plant would be forced to close down if it had to continue to use the city's system under the present stipulations.

By federal district court order, the Twin Falls sewage plant must complete its modifications to meet Environmental Protection Agency standards by July 1, 1982. A contract signed in May 1980 with IFF is scheduled to take effect then.

Odenwald said preliminary work indicated that it was "highly unlikely" a new treatment system would completed before July 1, but said a system might be completed by September 1982.

Council members emphasized they would be sorry to see IFF withdraw from the system and reiterated that the standards set by EPA were beyond their control.

Odenwald said he understood the city's situation, but "on a pure business basis, that's not my problem, that's yours." He stressed IFF was committed to keeping the Twin Falls plant operating.

Even if IFF pulls out, the $6-million modification of the sewage plant will continue. Courtney said portions of the modular plant could be shut down to minimize operational costs.

United Way luncheon is slated today

TWIN FALLS — The United Way's annual kickoff luncheon will be held today at noon at the Holiday Inn.

The date of the luncheon was inadvertently reported as Wednesday. The Times-News regrets the error.

Gooding sets Harvest Days

GOODING — Harvest Days will be celebrated with a shower of ping-pong balls falling on the downtown area Friday afternoon.

The 300 to 400 ping-pong balls are scheduled to be dropped from an airplane at 3:30 p.m. According to Chamber of Commerce president Gene Heller, "Each ball will have a merchant's name and a prize of cash or merchandise noted on it.

"People who find the balls must take them to the merchants to get the prizes," Heller explained.

A grand prize of $200 in cash will be awarded.

The Merchants Bureau, with the backing of the Chamber of Commerce, is sponsoring the three-day sale event beginning today. Heller said the sale will feature special items each day. There will also be booths for baked goods and some sidewalk displays, he added.

The highlight of the event will be Friday's ping-pong ball drop. "The Gooding High School band is scheduled to play Friday, and the streets will be decorated with corn stalks, street banners, and other harvest items," Heller said.

"We hope to make it a special festive event."

Cablevision makes switch sometime today

By STEVE LIPSON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Magic Valley Cablevision makes its controversial program switch today, but by Wednesday evening the company was not sure what time the switch would be made.

Sometime today, residents in the more than 13,000 homes that subscribe to Cablevision will stop receiving four Salt Lake City stations. Instead, they will receive three Boise stations, plus an all news station, an all sports station and a combination station that shows children's programming by day and cultural programs by night.

The changes have led to loud protests since they were announced more than a month ago. By the end of last week, Cablevision had received several hundred letters of protest and petitions signed by several hundred people.

Another protest petition, weighing several pounds and containing more than 2,500 signatures, was delivered to the company's offices Wednesday afternoon.

The signatures were gathered in slightly more than a week.

However, the number of people who have asked for their service to be canceled is still "minuscule," according to one Cablevision employee. "One woman I know of even asked us to cancel her order to cancel," she said.

Protesters are upset about the loss of the "more professional" local newscasts from Salt Lake City and over the fact that by the time subscribers were told of the planned switch, the final decision already had been made.

Gene Ritnour, the Cablevision area manager, said all the surveys and market research the company has done in the last four years indicates the new package will give most viewers more of the kind of programs they want.

P&Z approves Bowladrome expansion

TWIN FALLS — The city Planning and Zoning Commission approved all four requests presented at its Tuesday night meeting.

David L. Deliett was granted a special use permit to construct a meeting room and 12 additional bowling lanes at the east end of the Bowladrome, 220 Eastland Dr.

G. Kent Taylor was granted a zoning variation to permit him to continue to use a sign at the Justamere Inn building, 401 Second St. N.

Dr. R.A. Drake and Harold Drake were granted a special use permit for the construction of an addition to the existing southeast wing of Woodstone Manor, a retirement home, at 491 Caswell Ave. W. The addition will include a small apartment and a meeting room.

Differences between the new building plan and Woodstone Manor's original plans were noted by city engineer Gary Young, who said they would be researched before the building permit is issued.

Also granted was a request by Continental Distributing Co. for a special use permit to construct a building, for wholesale distribution of petroleum products, at Minidoka Avenue and Fifth Street South. The company has yet to be issued a building permit.

The next commission meeting was set for Oct. 13.

Meehl denies probation for robber

TWIN FALLS — Saying he has compassion for victims of crimes as well as criminal defendants, 5th District Court Judge Daniel Meehl Wednesday refused leniency for a Twin Falls man who was convicted of robbery earlier this year.

Meehl ordered Charles F. Spencer, 26, to return to the Idaho state penitentiary at Boise.

Spencer last appeared in Meehl's courtroom on June 22 after the defendant pleaded to armed robbery. At that time, Meehl sentenced Spencer to serve up to five years in prison.

Meservy's recommendation stemmed from a plea bargain agreement under which Spencer testified against co-defendant Ron Pierce concerning the March 4 armed robbery of the Maverik Country Store, 366 Washington St.

Pierce was later convicted.

Wednesday, Spencer's lawyer, Twin Falls County Public Defender Mike Walz, requested a reduction in Spencer's sentence, saying the defendant's family was suffering because of his absence.

Under oath, Spencer said his wife had suffered two nervous breakdowns during the past four months. He also expressed concern about potentially losing custody of his four children.

Walz said Spencer had proved himself capable of completing a probation. During a four-month period preceding his sentencing hearing, Spencer had been released on his own recognizance and had not violated any laws, Walz said.

While expressing compassion for the defendant's family, Meehl said he also "has compassion for the countless victims of robberies performed by people using loaded guns."

Meehl added his policy in the future would call for harsh sentences for persons convicted of using firearms in the commission of a crime. While rehabilitation was a factor, Meehl said his major objective in the sentence "was not rehabilitation but punishment as well as a deterrent."

Sullivan

constitute justifiable homicide," and that he "could not in good faith" prosecute her.

Sullivan was released from jail at about 4 p.m.

What emerged from the investigation is an image of the defendant as a battered woman. DeHaan and Fuller noted the woman was treated for a broken leg as a result of a beating which occurred several months ago.

DeHaan added the defendant had approached Twin Falls Police seeking a restraining order against the victim but later withdrew that request.

Noting "the police could not be with her 24 hours a day," and that such actions frequently only serve to make a situation worse, DeHaan said the defendant's decision not to pursue a restraining order was "a real difficult judgment call."

According to DeHaan, Sullivan was asleep at her home late Saturday when the victim approached her in a drunken state. An autopsy revealed a high alcohol content in Fisher's bloodstream.

At that point, Fisher apparently began beating the woman, something police verified through bruises on the defendant's arms.

"We verified her story (that) he'd been out drinking and came home mad," DeHaan said.

At that point, the defendant grabbed Fisher's shotgun and shot the victim through the side, causing massive damage to the victim's heart and internal organs.

Although Fuller expressed confidence that the case would have resulted in an acquittal if it had gone to trial, he said the dimissal of the charge boiled down to the interview session Tuesday. That amounted to a gamble because prosecutors would have been able to use any such statement as evidence against her.

"I was confident they'd believe her. I believed her," he said. "Without that statement, without that testimony, I don't think Harry or the police would have had any choice but to prosecute."

He said that statement indicated Sullivan's action was not premeditated but a result of fear.

"She was there and he was coming at her," he said. It was just survival. (It was) votan reaction, nothing more. It was so fast, there was no time to think There was no time to do anything."

Asked if he expected an adverse public reaction to the decision not to put the case to a 12-member jury, DeHaan said, "There's been a lot of public interest in this case. I really don't know what the public reaction will be. At this time, I think this is the correct action for me to take regardless of the public reaction."

Fuller said he was "real happy with the decision by Mr. DeHaan and the investigation of (Police Chief) Tim Qualls and (detective) Gary Corder. I think justice was done."

He said Sullivan will probably remain in Twin Falls and attempt to resume her life. She works as a dental assistant in the area.

"That's not going to be easy," he said. "Any way you look at it, she killed a man and that's not going to be easy to live with."

Botulism

Botulism is particularly insidious because a product may be chock full of the toxin, but it cannot be seen, smelled or tasted. A piece of contaminated food as small as a bean can cause death.

If the toxin is ingested, it affects the nervous system, with symptoms appearing eight to 12 hours later. Death is caused by paralysis of the body's breathing system.

Botulism is usually characterized by hoarseness, digestive upset, double vision, peculiar sensations of weariness and difficulty with speech and swallowing.

Tom Marlow developed nausea, double vision and difficulty with coordination a short time after he ate sandwiches made with trout home-canned by a friend.

He went to Moritz Community Hospital and was soon transferred to St. Alphonsus, Boise. After tests confirmed the botulism, health officials were dispatched to pick up the remaining home-canned trout.

Within three days, Marlow was unable to walk, talk, open his eyes or even breathe. He underwent an emergency tracheotomy and was hooked up to a respirator.

For three weeks he lay in a hospital bed, conscious of his surroundings, but unable to respond.

"I felt no pain at all to speak of," he recalled. "I knew I had only two choices: to give up or hang in there and keep pulling."

He could feel the nurses bustling about him and listen to a radio left on for his benefit.

He eventually regained use of his senses but was forced to write messages to communicate, unable to speak because of the respirator.

After spending July through September in intensive care, he was gradually removed from the respirator to practice breathing on his own. Physical therapy was started to combat the effects of lying in bed for three months.

Marlow attributes his recovery to his hardy physical condition prior to his bout. He plans to eventually return to his construction job.

His hospital bill? More than $60,000. Fortunately Marlow has insurance.

Other botulism outbreaks in Idaho have involved home-canned smoked salmon, tomato juice, beets and apple butter. In one case, commercially processed luncheon meat was suspected.

Biermann recalls a botulism case in which a person canned large chunks of trout. The chunks were too large for heat to effectively penetrate and kill the C. botulinum spores.

The bacteria's toxin may be destroyed by cooking home-canned foods, a practice Biermann thinks may be preventing additional botulism cases. Fish, he notes, is usually eaten cold.

He doesn't recommend eating low-acid canned food that was not pressure-cooked at temperatures exceeding 240 degrees F. Biermann also suggests that suspected food be cooked and buried, rather than just thrown out, to avoid contact with pets or children.

The health department also asks home canners to follow canning instructions properly. In some cases, adding citric acid or bottled lemon juice will lower the pH to prevent the growth of the C. botulinum bateria.

Seven strains of C. botulinum have been identified. Type A is most common in the West. In addition to food-borne botulism, infant botulism and wound botulism have been identified as separate but rare diseases.

From 1950 to 1977, there were 678 food-borne botulism cases nationwide, with 169 deaths.

Swisher blasts phone record searches

BOISE (UPI) — Regulators of utilities cannot "sit trembling in fear and paralysis" while authorities secretly obtain the telephone records of individuals, newspapers and other institutions, a state official said today.

Idaho Public Utilities Commission President Perry Swisher was defending proposed commission rules that were under attack by the Idaho Prosecuting Attorneys Association and a state Law Enforcement Department lawyer.

Swisher said the PUC's proposal to require telephone companies to immediately tell customers when their records are subpoenaed — unless a judge's order bars the disclosure — was merely an attempt to protect the public.

He said the rules were sparked in part by an incident last October when the Ada County prosecutor secretly subpoenaed Mountain Bell for the telephone records of the Idaho Statesman, and the act was not made known to the newspaper for some five months.

Verbal jousting broke out in a hearing on the rules after Boise County Prosecutor Thomas Cushman, president-elect of the prosecutors' group, accused the PUC of invading the authority of the judiciary.

Brian N. Donesley, representing the Idaho Law Enforcement Department, also rapped the PUC proposal, saying it could lead to life-threatening situations for investigators working on cases in which it is disclosed that telephone records have been subpoenaed.

Cushman charged the commission was attempting to "delve beyond areas of authority expressly granted" to the PUC by the Legislature. He said the rule was "an attempt to change the law" by administrative action.

Saying an attorney general's opinion had questioned the rules, he said the proposal "ignores legal counsel and tramples on laws" that allow prosecutors to pursue investigations.

Swisher said the rules spoke only to the relationship between the PUC and utilities and that the powers of courts and prosecutors were not affected. The rule would not apply if a judge forbade a utility to disclose the subpoena of telephone records, Swisher said.

He said the rules would require only that "in the absence of a judge's order, the utility must tell people it's handing out their underwear."

> 'Must we (the PUC) sit trembling in fear and paralysis . . . before proposing a rule? Are we only a bureacracy here just to answer the mail and pass on rate increases?'
> — Commissioner Perry Swisher

"As an occupant of the henhouse, where do I turn to for protection," Swisher asked Cushman.

"The Legislature is the place to go, not an administrative agency," the prosecutor responded.

Although Cushman said judicial ethics would prevent any such activity, Swisher complained that a a prosecutors could go on a "fishing expedition" in the records of a newspaper or those of another type of institution or individual.

He complained that Ada County Prosecutor Jim Harris had an opportunity to delve deeply into the Statesman's phone records even though he obtained the records just for possible evidence in a kidnapping case.

Harris said he was trying to track down a kidnapping suspect. Statesman reporter Ellen Marks in September had been charged with contempt of court, jailed for seven hours and fined thousands of dollars by a magistrate for her refusal to reveal sources she tapped to write a story on the kidnapping case.

"Must we (the PUC) sit trembling in fear and paralysis and wait for total unanimity in the attorney general's office and the Legislature before proposing a rule," Swisher asked Cushman. "Are we only a bureacracy here just to answer the mail and pass on rate increases?"

He said a deputy attorney general assigned to the commission wrote the rules and disagreed with the attorney's general's opinion that questioned them.

Swisher also noted the Legislature had power to veto any rules set down by the commission. But, in a matter involving court and prosecutorial concerns, Cushman said, "You must wait for the Legislature."

Cushman said the PUC generally existed "to respond to complaints and not protect the people against themselves."

"It is not a policy of the commission to let freight trains roll over it," Swisher said.

Commissioner Conley Ward Jr. quoted two sections of the Idaho Code that he said granted the PUC power to promulgate rules governing the practices of utilities, but Cushman said the commission was trying to extend its power into the judicial process.

Donesley said the rules interfered with the scales of justice, and "the PUC does not have a role in that balancing."

He also said the rule gave no protection to the public because "the intrusion has occurred" in obtaining telephone records. "It seems a hollow gesture," he said.

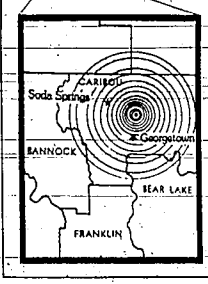
Donesley also cited "a threat to human life" in that revealing an aspect of an investigation could endanger field investigators.

The PUC proposal does not require disclosure of subpoenas or requests made by grand juries or by agencies that under state law can issue subpoenas and that tell a judge that any disclosure would impede a felony investigation.

The commission also is considering a rule that would prevent automatically recorded telephone conversations from being released "except for security, safety or public interest reasons."

Earthquake

Soda Springs area rocked



SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — University of Utah seismologists reported Wednesday that an earthquake with a magnitude of 4.0 to 4.25 occurred at 10:17 p.m. Tuesday in southeastern Idaho.

The shock occurred 8 miles northeast of Georgetown and about 19 miles southeast of Soda Springs in the vicinity of Georgetown Canyon. The area of the epicenter is relatively unpopulated but minor shaking was felt in Georgetown, said a university spokesman.

Is a senator blocking lead trial testimony?

BOISE (UPI) — An Idaho senator has attempted to prevent a former Center for Disease Control doctor from testifying in the lead-poisoning case against Bunker Hill Co., an attorney claimed in U.S. District Court Wednesday.

Paul Whelan, the Seattle lawyer representing nine former Kellogg children in their $20 million suit against the North Idaho mining company, said "pressure through an Idaho senator" has frustrated his efforts to obtain testimony from officials at the federal medical center in Atlanta, Ga.

And he said Dr. Phillip Landrigan was one of the officials the unnamed senator attempted to keep away from the three-week-old trial. Landrigan, a former CDC doctor who organized lead-blood tests for Kellogg children in the mid-1970s, now works for the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health.

"We almost couldn't get Dr. Landrigan," Whelan told Judge Ray McNichols while jurors were absent from the courtroom. "We're doing the best we can."

Jurors will decide whether the nine children sustained mental and physical disorders as a result of exposure to lead emissions from Bunker Hill's Silver Valley mine.

Bunker Hill's attorney, John G. Layman, however, said Whelan's comments implied Bunker Hill had been applying pressure to bar Landrigan from speaking at the trial.

"That's absolutely untrue," Layman said. "I want the record clear on that."

Layman asked McNichols to permit Whelan to elaborate on his comments, saying additional information would give him a chance to investigate the charge.

"I think it's an area that's nonproductive as an area of discussion," McNichols said.

"I'm prepared to make a statement, but I agree with the court," Whelan responded.

None of the attorneys involved in the case would comment on the charges, saying a gag order issued by McNichols barred discussion of the case outside the courtroom.

UP&L rates cut about 38% to Idaho customers

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho homeowners who buy their electricity from Utah Power and Light Co. can expect to see an average 38 percent reduction in their utility bills beginning Thursday as a result of an agreement between UP&L and the Bonneville Power Administration.

In announcing the agreement Wednesday, Darcie White, UP&L vice president of public relations, Salt Lake City, said the reductions would amount to as much as $236 a year for the average residential customer while irrigators with high-usage wells and pumps could save as much as $4,000 per month.

White said the reduction is possible because UP&L will sell power to the regional power pool, which was established by Congress last year, at its own rate and buy it back at the BPA's average cost of purchasing electricity from all the utilities who are members of the pool.

UP&L's rates are higher than many utilities in the region because most of its power comes from coal-fired generating plants while other companies produce their power at less expensive hydropower facilities.

UP&L requested and was granted approval Wednesday to implement the rate reductions by the Idaho Public Utilities Commission.

Gov. John Evans lauded the agreement between BPA and UP&L for its expected savings to southeastern Idahoans.

"This will give us some breathing space to try to resolve some of the factors that drive up the cost of electrical power in the Northwest, such as the issue of building the Washington Public Power Supply System nuclear plants," Evans said.

The governor said although Idaho Power Co., which serves most of the state, had not yet signed a contract with BPA, its customers also could expect a rate reduction if such an agreement were reached.

"I'm looking forward to Idaho Power Co. joining with these other utilities in contracting with Bonneville Power Administration in order to provide this lower cost federal power to all its Idaho customers," Evans said.

The utility's Utah and Wyoming customers will not receive similar rate reductions, however, since the Northwest Power Planning Act, which authorizes the power pool, only covers Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Montana.

Thus UP&L's 36,500 residential and irrigation customers in southeastern Idaho were eligible to benefit from the contract.

But White said UP&L's electricity rates for its Idaho customers would increase over the long-term since much of BPA's power will be increasingly furnished by expensive thermal and nuclear power plants.

UP&L is the second utility serving Idaho to sign a contract with BPA. Rate reductions of 4.7 percent also are expected to go into effect Thursday for Pacific Power and Light Co.'s 7,000 North Idaho residential and irrigation customers.

However, those rate reductions might be halted if a Northwest environmental group obtains a federal court order blocking the BPA's electricity sales contracts.

Lloyd Marbet, anti-nuclear activist and head of Forelaws on Board of Portland, announced earlier this week the group will seek the order, claiming the BPA failed to carry out extensive studies on the contracts' environmental effects.

However, he said the group would not immediately seek the injunction against the contracts because the court will need to do extensive research on the "congressional intent" of the Northwest power bill.

Meningitis warning issued

BOISE (UPI) — Southwest Idaho health officials have issued a warning about an outbreak of aseptic meningitis, a disease they said causes dizziness and headaches but usually does not kill.

The state Health and Welfare Department and the Central District Health Department said Tuesday about 15-20 cases of the disease have been reported in the region since the beginning of August.

The South Central District Health Department said one case had been reported in the Magic Valley area late this summer, but it involved a Walla Walla, Wash., resident passing through the area.

The disease, not as serious as the often fatal spinal meningitis, is caused by certain viruses, and symptoms include dizziness, severe headaches, fever, sensitivity to light and neck and back stiffness, said Dr. Charles Brokopp of the state health agency.

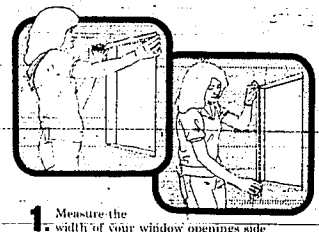
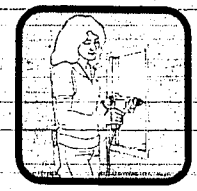
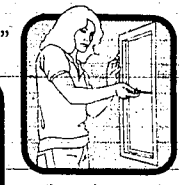
"You can install your own quality, inside storm windows in 6 easy steps... I do!"



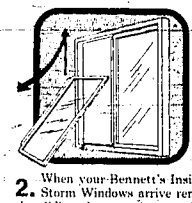
1. Measure the width of your window openings side to side and top to bottom. When you have both measurements for all your windows, call the Bennett's store nearest you and place your order.



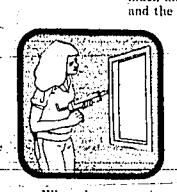
3. Set the frame in place on the inside edge of your window opening and mark the hole to be drilled. Leave as much air space as you can between the original window and the storm window for better insulation.



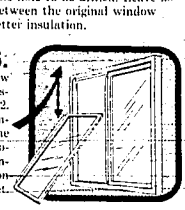
4. Secure the storm window in place with screws. A screw at the base is not necessary.



2. When your Bennett's Inside Storm Windows arrive remove the sliding glass panels to avoid breakage.



5. When the storm window is secured use caulk to seal the edges.



6. The final step is to replace the window panels by reversing step 2. All storm windows will come with a free "do-it-yourself" installation pamphlet.

There's no need to remove Bennett's Inside Storm Windows. They will insulate summer and winter and can cut window heat loss (or gain) by as much as 50%. Available in aluminum, white or bronze finishes.

Idaho Republican chairman attacks Frank Church for criticism of GOP

IDAHO FALLS (UPI) — The chairman of the Idaho Republican Party blasted former Democratic Sen. Frank Church Wednesday, saying the former lawmaker is trying to cover for his party's failures by placing the blame on President Reagan and the GOP.

Dennis Olsen's attack on the former Idaho senator came in response to claims by Church earlier this week that Republicans were responsible for the economic ills facing the Bunker Hill Mining Co. and for stripping funds from the poor to benefit the rich.

"Frank Church's attempts to lay the blame for our nation's current economic problems on the Reagan Administration's policies is like accusing a beleaguered firefighter of starting the fire," Olsen said.

He said Church still supports "those same policies that led us into the morass of double-digit inflation and excruciatingly high interest rates."

According to Olsen, Democrats started the inflation spiral 25 years ago and "did nothing during the years but fuel the fire, until now it has become a raging inferno."

Church's condemnation of Reagan Administration policies came Monday during a fund-raising speech for Democratic congressional candidate Larry LaRocco.

The former senator said Democrats should declare war on the GOP's "misguided" economic policies and should "start fighting back for Idaho."

He said fiscal policies endorsed by Reagan and Idaho's congressional delegation, wholly comprised of Republicans, were responsible for problems facing the Bunker Hill Mining Co. The company in the northern portion of the state announced its closure earlier this year, but several efforts are underway to keep the mine in operation.

Church also said the man LaRocco hopes to defeat in 1982, Rep. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, has voted for cuts in the Social Security while supporting large tax reductions for high-income Americans.

Actor John Houseman to speak at BSU Oct. 7

BOISE (UPI) — Academy Award winning actor John Houseman will speak at Boise State University Oct. 7 as part of the school's homecoming week celebration.

Houseman, whose career includes producing, directing and writing for theatre, movies and television, will speak on the history in films and his own experiences in the film industry at 8 p.m. Oct. 7 in the BSU Student Union Building Ballroom.

Houseman probably is most recognized for his Academy Award winning portrayal of Professor Kingsfield in the movie "The Paper Chase."

Evans: Mine trial remarks are not true

BOISE (UPI) — Gov. John Evans has defended the reporting of the Bunker Hill Co. lead poisoning trial in Boise as "factual," but says testimony being made at the trial is "not true."

The governor made his remarks Tuesday to reporters and a delegation from the city of Kellogg, who presented Evans with a petition signed by 4,337 North Idaho residents protesting descriptions of their area.

The petitions, which were taped end to end and wrapped around a cylinder, were unfurled down the Statehouse steps and across Jefferson Street in front of the Capitol.

"A cover letter accompanying the petition said its purpose was "to express our strong objection to the inaccurate portrayal of our community as related by plaintiffs and carried in news reports from the lead litigation currently underway in U.S. District Court in Boise."

"Bunker Hill Co. and its parent company, Gulf Resources and Chemical Corp., Houston, Texas, are accused in the $20 million lawsuit of poisoning nine former Kellogg children with lead emissions from its Kellogg smelter.

"We have watched in disgust during the past three weeks as our community and its residents have been slandered and degraded by testimony and oral news accounts which have no basis in truth," the letter continues.

"Descriptions of the city of Kellogg as 'a very unhappy place' and 'a small, backward community' where 'plants won't grow, pets die, and there is never a clear day' are without any substantiating basis in fact."

The letter also said, "We have seen dramatic improvements in the environmental quality of our community in the past several years, thanks largely to massive expensive clean up and revegetation programs by the Bunker Hill Co."

Evans agreed that Kellogg residents' "way of life and environment has very much improved over the years" as a result of nearly $30 million in investments by Bunker Hill.

He said he would "give very strong support" to the quality of life in Kellogg "everywhere I go."

Dean Petersen, former president of the Kellogg Chamber of Commerce and leader of the petition drive, did not deny that the area did not have some problems with air quality but he said he felt "the problems we did have are being taken care of by the best technology we have to do it."

Petersen also denied saying media reports were inaccurate, but said they were "one-sided."

He said the reports were "very slanderous" to Kellogg and he hoped contradictory reports would be revealed when Bunker Hill presents it's case.

The Kellogg funeral home director said although the city did not want to lose the Bunker Hill operation, the recent announcement of its closure by the end of the year was "another problem" and was not related to the petition drive.

However, Petersen did applaud Evans for the "fine job" he has done in trying to find a purchaser for the lead, zinc and silver mining and smelting operation.

Petersen said the governor was "one of the first there" after the closure was announced.

In appreciation for his efforts, the delegation presented the governor with a painting of a "White Knight" by a Bunker Hill worker. Since the closure announcement, officials have been looking for a "White Knight" to halt the shutdown of Bunker Hill.

Evans also received a purple jacket and cap from the Kellogg Booster Club, which he donned during the meeting.

Pro-ERA lawyers say states in suit haven't shown injury

BOISE (UPI) — Attorneys for Idaho and Arizona haven't fulfilled the requirements of filing a lawsuit in their case over the Equal Rights Amendment, because they haven't proven their two states sustained an injury the court can remedy, lawyers claimed in Idaho U.S. District court.

Lawyers for the government and the National Organization for Women renewed their motions for dismissal of the suit in briefs filed late Tuesday, saying the two states haven't met the four necessary tests in filing the lawsuit.

And they said the injuries the states claim are "only inchoate (pending) and speculative" with no basis in fact.

The 1979 case asks Judge Marion Callister to require the U.S. General Services Administration to accept the Idaho Legislature's rescission of its 1972 ERA ratification vote. It also asks the court to declare unconstitutional congressional action to extend the ERA ratification deadline.

NOW has entered the case as a defendant on behalf of the federal government.

Callister during August asked parties in the suit to submit briefs concerning the two state's right to bring the lawsuit in an apparent move to decide the case on that narrow issue.

Attorneys for Idaho and Arizona earlier this month told the judge they had the right to sue because votes by lawmakers in the two states have been debased and the states' rights to ratify an amendment have been abridged by the GSA and Congress.

But government and NOW attorneys Tuesday said the state's claims were premature. They said Idaho and Arizona haven't proven any actual injury, they haven't proven that their constitutional rights were impaired, that the defendant — the administrator of the GSA — caused the alleged injury or that the court has the power to give "meaningful relief."

All of those four rules must be met in order for the suit to succeed, they said.

Idaho and Arizona didn't have the right to sue until three more states have ratified the amendment and Congress determines if the ERA will become part of the U.S. Constitution, the attorneys said. And that situation never may occur, they said.

"When stripped of its rhetoric and strained artfulness, the (basis) of plaintiffs' complaint is simply a fear that the proposed ERA may become part of the Constitution," NOW's brief said. "No such 'injury' has yet occurred. It is, moreover entirely speculative as to whether such 'injury' will even occur."

Jesse Walters is first chief of new court

BOISE (UPI) — Outgoing Fourth District Judge Jesse Walters has been selected as the first chief of the Idaho Court of Appeals.

Walters joins 2nd District Judge Roger Swanstrom and Pocatello attorney Donald Burnett on the new panel. Gov. John Evans appointed the three appeals court members in early September.

The court, created by the 1980 state Legislature in an effort to relieve the work load of the Idaho Supreme Court, is scheduled to begin considering cases the first of next year.

Idaho Supreme Court Justice Robert Bakes announced the appointment of Walters, 42, a University of Idaho Law school graduate from Idaho Falls, as head of the new court. Bakes said Walters would serve a two-year term as chief Appeals Court judge.

Lawyer says Sivak won't get death

BOISE (UPI) — The defense attorney for Lacey Sivak, convicted of the brutal slaying of a female gas station attendant, says he does not expect the judge in the capital homicide case to sentence his client to death.

Ada County Assistant Public Defender Rolf Kehne said Tuesday he will be surprised if Fourth District Court Judge Robert Newhouse orders Sivak, 22, Boise, to die by lethal injection for the April 6 murder of Dixie Wilson.

Jurors Tuesday found Sivak guilty of killing the 30-year-old woman — who was shot five times and received at least 20 stab wounds — during an armed robbery of the service station in Garden City.

Although the jury returned a guilty verdict on the first-degree homicide complaint, it refused to find Sivak guilty of premeditated murder. The judgment said the defendant killed the woman during the commission of a felonious robbery, which also carries a possible death sentence.

Kehne said the jury's distinction reduces the odds that his client will be ordered to die for the slaying.

"I feel it's much less likely that he will get the death sentence at this point," the attorney said following the verdict.

He added the six-man, six-woman panel "was as fine a jury as I've ever seen." Jurors, who deliberated for nine hours, also found Sivak guilty of robbery and illegal use of a firearm in connection with the robbery of a Phillips 66 station where Mrs. Wilson worked as a cashier.

Newhouse has scheduled an Oct. 30 hearing to gather information for use in handing down sentences on the convictions. No formal sentencing date has been set.

Another man, Randall Bainbridge of Garden City, is scheduled to stand trial Nov. 6 on first-degree murder charges stemming from the same killing.

Sivak — who worked at the gas station until he was fired in February — took the witness stand in his own defense last week and said Bainbridge was the person who killed Mrs. Wilson.

He admitted to witnessing the slaying and said he supplied the murder weapon, but placed the blamed on his accused accomplice. Sivak also said Bainbridge sexually molested the victim after she was stabbed and shot.

FBI intensifies probe into death

LEWISTON (UPI) — The FBI has been transferring agents to Lewiston from its various offices in the Northwest to aid in the investigation of the slaying of a University of Idaho student.

Jay E. Bailey, agent in charge of the FBI's Montana-Idaho division in Butte, said two additional agents have been working full-time in Lewiston, where the murder investigation of Kristin David, 22, is being coordinated.

However, Bailey said the investigation into the killing is being conducted throughout the West and said clues to solving the case have been discovered by nearly all of the FBI's offices on the West Coast.

Ms. David, who had been living in Clarkston, Wash., disappeared June 26 while riding her bicycle between Moscow and Lewiston.

Her dismembered body was found in the Snake River below Clarkston July 4.

Drunk drivers target in California

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Declaring California must "put drunken drivers out of commission," Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. has signed four bills making it easier to convict drunken motorists and imposing mandatory jail sentences on them.

At a Capitol news conference, Brown said 2,648 people died in alcohol-related traffic accidents in California last year and the cost of drunken drivers to society was more than $1 billion a year by National Highway Traffic Safety Administration estimates.

"It's time to put drunken drivers out of commission," Brown said. "Drunken driving is a plague on our society. These bills give California one of the toughest anti-drunken driving programs in the nation."

The bills will:

• Make it easier to convict drunken drivers by legally assuming someone is intoxicated if 0.10 percent alcohol is found in the body.

• Require 48 hours in jail or a 90-day driver's license suspension and fine for first-time drunken driving convictions. It also increases the fines by $20 to help compensate victims of drunken driving accidents. Repeat offenders could get up to four years in prison with a five-year license suspension and a $5,000 fine if death or injury accident was involved.

• Add $1 to vehicle registration fees so 670 new California Highway Patrol officers can be hired.

• Restrict plea bargaining in drunken driving cases and treat reckless driving involving the use of alcohol as a drunken driving offense to increase penalties for repeat offenders.

"These bills will not solve the problem, not stop the fatalities and injuries unless enforced by judges and the courts — but it's a first step," said Candy Lightner of Sacramento.

Woman writes book on prison

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — A woman who spent eight years in a Turkish prison on drug smuggling charges is planning a book about her experience.

Kathryn Zenz, 35, now lives in Salem, Ore., with Jo Ann McDaniel and Robert Hubbard, her prison mates, who were married in Turkey. She told the Milwaukee Journal Tuesday that a movie may follow the book.

"It will be a story that will be an honest portrayal of what went on for eight years," Miss Zenz said.

"I think it will be a good book. So much has been buried in eight years. It will take a lot of soul searching and a lot of delving into the material we have."

The trio had been serving 24-year sentences in Turkey when they were released last February under a prisoner exchange treaty.

Justice OK's holds for police

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Justice William Rehnquist is allowing Los Angeles police to continue to use two controversial "choke holds," saying the city stands a reasonable chance of winning its case before the Supreme Court in defense of the restraints.

Rehnquist Tuesday postponed for the second time a federal court order that in most cases would bar Los Angeles' 6,500 police officers from using the control holds, which render suspects unconscious.

The holds cause unconsciousness by temporarily blocking the flow of air to the lungs or blood to the brain.

Under the justice's order, police are free to use the restraint techniques until the high court either refuses to take the city's case, or agrees to hear arguments and issues a final decision.

In his five-page order, Rehnquist said there is "substantial likelihood" the high court will agree to hear the case and "a reasonable chance" the city could win.

The city has until Dec. 9 to file its petition for Supreme Court review.

The federal court had barred use of the holds — except when officers were in danger of serious bodily harm — as a result of a civil rights suit.

Adolph Lyons filed the suit in February, 1977, after police stopped him for a traffic violation and allegedly without justification gripped him in a control hold until he was unconscious.

Authorities hunt suspect in shootings

LOS FRESNOS, Texas (UPI) — Authorities searched Wednesday for a man a witness said wounded a policeman minutes after a Department of Public Safety trooper was killed a few miles away in southeast Texas.

Department spokesman Larry Todd in Austin, Texas, said a warrant was issued for a man from the lower Rio Grande Valley who was wanted for questioning in the shootings, which officials believe were related.

Department officials in Edinburg said Leonel Torres Herrera, 34, of Edinburg was being sought for questioning in the case. A car believed used in the shootings was recovered from the suspect's residence, officials said. There were reports Herrera was acquitted in 1980 in the shooting of a county patrol officer, who later recovered.

Todd said a witness provided authorities with information about the shooting of the city policeman after he stopped a car for speeding. The city officer did not know the trooper had been shot minutes earlier.

Patrolman David Irvine Rucker, 37, was killed about 11 p.m. Tuesday. A passerby found his body in the Texas 100 roadway about six miles east of Los Fresnos, in far southeast Texas.

His patrol car was parked on the side of the road and the passerby used the vehicle's radio to notify authorities the trooper was shot in the head, Todd said.

A short time later, city policeman Enrique Carrisalez, 23, was shot in the chest. He was in critical condition after being rushed to Valley Baptist Medical Center in Harlingen.

Ex-teacher defends view

PIERRE, S.D. (UPI) — A former teacher denied he overemphasized creationism in his biology classes and said he did not need the Bible to support his claims.

The state Supreme Court Tuesday heard testimony about the 1980 dismissal of Lloyd Dale, once honored as biology teacher of the year, by the Lennmon School District.

Scientific creationism, as the 43-year-old fundamentalist Christian minister defines it, is the idea, backed up by scientific evidence, that man was created and did not evolve. He said it does not have to include Biblical teachings.

"There's no need for any Bible teaching in the classroom," Dale said. "What we see in nature proves there's design, not disorder. Evolution is disorder."

He said he covered most of the material in the biology book the school board assigned and discussed creationism without relying on the Bible.

Dale is a former South Dakota Education Association president and was named the state's outstanding biology teacher in 1969.

'Victory' over Medflies disappears as infestation spreads

LOS GATOS, Calif. (UPI) — Evidence of a spreading Mediterranean fruit fly infestation, announced only one day after officials had claimed virtual victory over the crop-eating pest, has suppressed hopes of winding down the aerial spraying of pesticides.

Sorties in the expanded spraying campaign were ordered Wednesday night over Hillsborough, one of the nation's wealthiest suburbs, only 20 miles south of San Francisco.

The decision to send malathion-dropping helicopters to spray the new and populous area, which includes Burlingame and parts of San Mateo, was announced Tuesday by Medfly officials following the discovery of a male fly in a San Mateo trap.

Confirmation of the discovery was called "very bad news" by a state Medfly project spokeswoman.

"We thought we had it under control," she said.

Earlier Tuesday, Medfly officials reported that a fertile female fruit fly had been found in an apple tree near Loma Mar, also outside the regular spraying zone.

The fly was described as an "escapee" from the corridors that have undergone two months of aerial spraying in the Santa Clara Valley.

That find resulted in spraying being ordered along a 9-square mile patch including parts of La Honda, Loma Mar and populated canyons and gulches in the wooded area of San Mateo County.

"Otherwise, everything is going pretty smoothly," spokesman Roger Blake said of the eradication program.

In Honolulu researchers suggested Tuesday that expensive fumigation of produce could be avoided by exposing fruit and vegetables to gamma radiation.

Professor James H. Moy said a panel at the University of Hawaii was unable to detect any unusual taste, or other change in fruits, treated with radiation to kill the pest.

Federal Food and Drug Administration officials could approve the plan as early as next year, said Moy.

There have been no new Medflies found inside the quarantined spray zone and officials have lightened the aerial attacks within the area.

In Los Angeles, Agricultural Commissioner Paul Engler told county supervisors spraying in affected Los Angeles areas would continue for one more month past the original scheduled six weeks in an effort to make sure no new adult Medflies emerge from the soil.

Radiation best fly antidote

HONOLULU (UPI) — A researcher says the best way to combat the destructive Mediterranean fruit fly may be to expose fruit and vegetables to gamma rays.

In a month of tests, a panel at the University of Hawaii has been unable to detect any unusual taste, or other change, in fruits treated with radiation to kill the Medfly.

Federal Food and Drug Administration approval could come as early as next year, said food engineering professor James H. Moy, because recent studies have answered safety questions about low-dose irradiation of foodstuffs.

California has been prohibited from shipping untreated fruits and vegetables to Japan to prevent possible spread of the Medfly. Fumigation facilities for the multi-billion billion fruit and vegetable industry would be prohibitively costly.

The California Department of Agriculture hired Moy and two colleagues to determine what gamma radiation dose levels are necessary to kill larvae in fruit. Later they were also asked to determine whether the market quality would be affected.

Moy said about 35 kilorads of gamma radiation is needed to kill the larvae and the FDA says food with a dose of up to 100 kilorads is safe for human consumption.

The study has turned up a much lower dose required to simply render the larvae sterile.

Andy Peoples of the California Department of Health in Sacramento said the gamma rays — known as pico waves — leave no residue, have no lingering after-effects and do not change the taste of the product.

Peoples agreed the low-radiation method could be approved for use as early as next year's fruit season if the federal Food and Drug Administration issues permits for registration.

Rail official pans slurry pipelines

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (UPI) — An executive of Burlington Northern Railroad says coal slurry pipelines are not needed, and will further deplete supplies of the West's water.

Louis W. Menk, BN board chairman, discounts proponents' claims that coal slurry pipelines eliminate "the 'disruption' caused by coal trains."

"Each coal train carries the equivalent of 1.2 million gallons of oil," Menk told the Englewood Lions Club Tuesday. "A ton of coal equals about three barrels of oil in energy. Last year, BN alone moved 100 million tons of coal, which means a lot of American money is staying at home instead of going to OPEC. So, we are disrupting the devil out of OPEC, I'll admit."

As another example of "disruption" caused by trains, Menk said coal trains had added 2,000 workers and "a multi-million-dollar payroll" in Alliance, Neb.

"Here in Colorado, 'disruption' amounts to a work force of about 2,700 with related purchasing, taxpaying and citizenship support that they provide to the state and the Denver area," he said.

Menk also said railroads were more versatile that slurry pipelines, which can carry only one product.

"The same shiny, steel rails that carry the coal also carry foodstuffs, industrial machinery, TV sets, forest products and just about any other type of commodity you want to name," he said.

But Menk said the strongest argument against slurry pipelines was their requirement for vast amounts of water.

"Anyone who has seen a pasture wither, a waterhole dry up, a lawn die or a lake disappear in a drought — things we all have seen here in the West — well, that person has to be mighty skeptical about slurry," he said.

Menk said railroads had more than enough capacity to carry all the coal the nation needs.

Center supported

GLASGOW, Mont. (UPI) — A proposed refugee relocation center near Glasgow has picked up support from the Valley County Development Council.

The council Tuesday passed a resolution endorsing the center as a source of employment. The Glasgow Chamber of Commerce earlier endorsed the proposed center.

LDS alter wording of prophecy about Indians

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — The Mormon Church has altered the wording of a prophecy about Indians so that it no longer says native Americans will develop "white" skin if they join the religion.

In a new edition of the Book of Mormon, a prophecy which had said Indians would become "white and delightsome" has been altered to read that they will become "pure and delightsome." Church members accept the Book of Mormon as holy scripture equivalent to the Bible.

Church spokesman Jerry Cahill said the first and second editions of the Book of Mormon, published by Joseph Smith in 1830 and 1837, used the word "white." A third edition, published in 1840, used the word "pure." But Cahill said the term "white" was re-adopted in all later editions.

However, he said, church officials believe the re-insertion of the word "white" was an editing error and that Smith intended to have the prophecy use the word "pure." Smith died in 1844.

Mormons are normally asked during church conferences to vote on whether new doctrines should be adopted or old doctrines should be amended or dropped. A general church conference is scheduled for Saturday and Sunday in Salt Lake City.

However, Cahill said Mormons will not be asked to vote this weekend on whether the wording of the Indian prophecy should be changed. He said church officials view the alteration as the equivalent of correcting a typographical error.

Church President Spencer W. Kimball, his three counselors, and the faith's Quorum of the Twelve Apostles have approved the change, Cahill said.

Mormons believe Smith was a prophet commanded by an angel sent from God to translate the Book of Mormon from a set of golden tablets.

The Book of Mormon is the story of ancient Israelites who moved to the American continent and developed into two warring factions — the righteous Nephites and the evil Lamanites.

According to Mormon doctrine, the Lamanites were ancestors of the American Indians. The Book of Mormon says the Lamanites exterminated the Nephites.

Mormons have generlly accepted the belief that God cursed the evil Lamanites with a dark skin and that the curse was passed on to present day Indians.

Church leaders, including Kimball, have said the curse of dark skin would be lifted from Indians who embraced the Mormon religion.

In 1960, before he was elevated to the presidency of the church, Kimball said in a speech that Indian children living with Mormon families had lighter skin than their brothers and sisters who remained on reservations.

The church has a program of temporarily placing Indian children with Mormon families so the youngsters can attend non-Indian public schools.

In 1978, the church scrapped a racial doctrine that prevented blacks from holding the priesthood. The Mormon priesthood is open to all faithful males age 12 or older.

Kimball announced a revelation from God ending the exclusion of blacks from the priesthood. Mormons believe the president of their church is a prophet.

Review of probe in death sought

DALLAS (UPI) — A Texas congressman said today he plans to ask a congressional committee to review the Marine Corps' findings in the California drowning of a recruit.

Rep. Jim Mattox is investigating the Aug. 27 drowning of Pvt. Randall Christian, 18, of Dallas during swimming qualification tests at the Marine Corps' Recruit Depot in San Diego, Calif.

He said the Marine Corps' report on the drowning contains "inconsistencies that render it useless and not believable."

Mattox said he would send the report and his conclusions about the Marine Corps investigation to Rep. Richard White, D-Texas, chairman of the investigative subcommittee.

Yosemite region hit by quake

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (UPI) — A strong earthquake followed by aftershocks rumbled along the eastern Sierra foothills Wednesday.

The tremor shook campers awake, loosened boulders and caused minor structural damage.

There were no injuries from the initial shock, which measured 5.8 on the Richter scale and was centered four miles west of the Mammoth Lake area in Mono County.

The 5:53 a.m. MDT quake was followed by one "major aftershock" of 5.5 magnitude and several smaller temblors, according to the CalTech seismographic station in Pasadena.

Clyde Campbell, a spokesman for the state Office of Emergency Services, said the quake caused minor damage to a shopping center in the Mammoth Lake area.

The quake, which was felt from Fresno to Nevada City, is the largest in a series of quakes which have centered in the Mammouth Lake area over the past two years, officials said.

At Yosemite, a large number of foreign tourists were awakened by the quake.

"I'm saying to myself it could be bears," said Thomas Lyons, 61, of Liverpool, England. "I thought it was bears in the corner of our room. I never would have guessed it was an earthquake." He said it scared his wife.

Mono County Sheriff's Lt. John Johnson said the quake rocked his office.

"We lost our lights for a while and our clock stopped at 4:53, but otherwise the damage is very minor," Johnson said. "It was a very strong shock. It sent a lot of rocks onto roads, but we haven't learned of any real damage to buildings or injuries."

In Fresno, the quake sent scores of sleepy residents to their telephones to call local law enforcement agencies.

The state Office of Emergency Services reported no injuries from the quake.

Rare ferret dogs' victim in Wyoming

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (UPI) — A carcass of a black-footed ferret, the rarest mammal in North America, has been found in Wyoming.

The animal was killed by dogs at Pitchfork, 11 miles west of Meeteetse near the Shoshone National Forest, last weekend, Mark Stromberg of the Nature Conservancy in Cheyenne said.

The discovery is "the first evidence of a live black-footed farret since 1976 when one was definitely identified in South Dakota. People were about to give up hope," Stromberg said.

The ferret is an endangered species and is protected by law, Stromberg said. A $250 reward is offered for a photograph of a live animal.

Wyoming Game and Fish Department biologist Harry Harju called the discovery "an extremely astounding event" in zoological circles.

"To a biologist, there could be no greater thrill than to see a black-footed ferret," he said.

The ferret was killed in the front yard of a ranchhouse, Harju said.

"The residents heard the dogs fighting with something. The next day they found the carcass in the yard," he said.

The carcass was frozen and taken to a taxidermist, who notified a game warden. The warden informed the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Office of Endangered Species in Billings, Mont.

The black-footed ferret is a weasel-like mammal about 14 inches long with a black mask and feet and a black-tipped tail. It lives in prairie dog towns and kills prairie dogs for food. Widespread efforts this century to eradicate prairie dogs caused the ferret's demise.

It is a secretive animal that usually leaves its burrow only at night.

The discovery was the first evidence of a live black-footed ferret in the state in 10 years, Harju said.

Nose guard

Often unpraised, the man in the middle, vital to any team

By CHRIS HAFT
Times-News writer

Nose guard. It's not a piece of protective equipment for the old schpozz, but one of the most unique positions on a football defense.

Put simply, the nose guard's job is to foul up the opponent's offense by trying to stick himself into the middle of it. Nose guards rub their — yes, their noses — in the dirt so others can make the big plays. They receive abuse while other defenders administer it.

A good nose guard prepared himself for his gridiron tasks by playing with boulders instead of building blocks as a child. He yanked out his own tonsils when they needed extraction. Whenever he's not playing football, he dreams about getting a truly challenging job as a lion tamer or prison warden.

A good nose guard should have no regard for life or limb, especially his own. He must thrive on physical punishment, love inflicting pain and not mind the disconcerting sound of crunching bones.

Once a nose guard is finally taken away from his pet boa constrictors and onto the football field, he usually doesn't gain as much notoriety as his defensive partners.

While the ends, tackles and linebackers pile up spectacular quarterback sacks and earn colorful nicknames like "Bubba" or "The Hammer," nose guards generally toil in anonymity.

Football coaches, however, maintain thorough appreciation for the nose guard's craft.

"If you've got a good nose guard, you're going to be a good, good football team," Burley High School Coach John Billetz affirmed.

"His position is really important. He kind of anchors the defense," Gooding Coach Paul Cox said.

"If we can't secure the inside (of the line), we can't secure any place else," said Twin Falls Coach Bill Jones, explaining why neutralizing a nose guard's effectiveness is essential.

When a nose guard isn't neutralized, he can dictate a defense's success. In a normal formation, he lines up opposite the offensive center. He starts close to the ball, and his job is to follow it once it's snapped.

"If we're asking him to play straight — control the center — the best we can ask the nose guard for is to get under the center's pads, find the football and get it," Billetz said. "If we're playing a 'slant,' we want him to beat that guard-center gap and find the football."

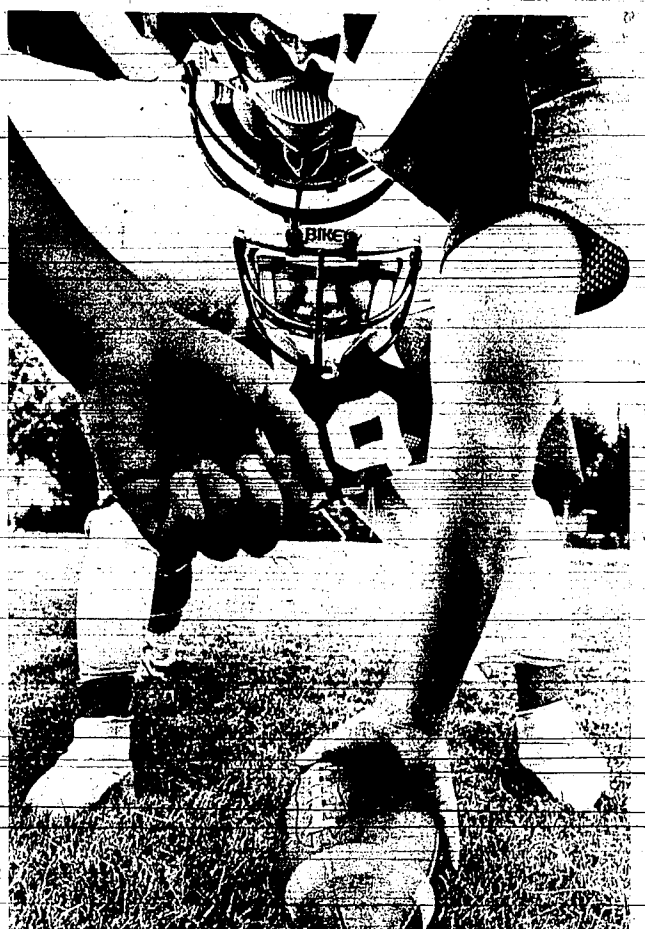
"A good nose guard can really break down some of the offensive plays that can hurt you, plays like counters, traps, misdirection-kind of plays," Cox said.

A nose guard is often most productive when he's kept out of the play — that is, when he gets blocked by two linemen.

"If they (the opponents) have to double-team our nose guard, it's an advantage for us, because then a guard is not on one of our linebackers," Billetz said.

Teams frequently must resort to double-teaming a nose guard, since snapping the ball can keep the center's hands literally and figuratively full.

"In high school football, you tell a kid to center the football and block someone. That's a pretty hard chore," Billetz said. "If he had to block a linebacker, that's a little easier than snapping the ball and blocking someone right on top of him."



STEVEN GRUENE/Times-News

Burley's Tim Knight doesn't usually smile when facing enemy centers head-to-head

Burley's Tim Knight, widely regarded as the Magic Valley's best nose guard, asserts that being double-teamed is the most difficult aspect of his position.

Knight said the extra attention starts "as soon as you do something good. If you do well in the first quarter, you get it the rest of the game."

Being part of this menage-a-trois doesn't bother Knight, though.

"They let down all the time," Knight said, referring to offensive linemen with a hint of condescension. "You keep going. As soon as they let down, you're right back in there."

The influence a nose guard can exercise was demonstrated in the first week of the season when Burley tied Twin Falls 6-6. Knight climaxed an impressive performance by blocking a 21-yard field goal attempt as time expired.

Billetz explained that when Knight blocked the kick, he was positioned between an offensive guard and the center, a gap where a nose guard aligns himself in a "slant" formation. "We just asked him to get penetration," Billetz said.

During the game Twin Falls fumbled three snaps from center. Such hastiness might have been due to the Bruins' desire to escape the 6-4, 216-pound Knight's clutches.

"I like to think Tim had something to do with that," Billetz admitted.

A nose guard has something to do with almost every play. Thus, coaches seek a strong yet nimble athlete to fill the position.

"You want a second-string fullback type, or a lineman that maybe just isn't big enough," Billetz said. "Tim Knight is an exception. That kid would be tackle on most people's teams. A good, ideal nose guard is a kid in the 5-10 to 6-2 range, 175-180 pounds. You don't want a big, lumbering kid; you want somebody who can beat the center, slide off (a block) and make the tackle.

"It's not a place to put just anybody in," the coach added. "You better have a pretty good football player in there."

The nose guard must also be a pretty good physical specimen simply to survive, since he usually swims amidst a sea of bodies.

"The nose guard is right in the middle of the formation, so he has to be an active kid, able to move from one side to the other," Billetz said. "He has to like to hit, mix it up, get after the ball because he's in a position where he can't. ... He and the linebackers are the only players involved on both sides of the football. You'd like the tackles and ends to be, but they're not.

The nose guard rarely makes spectacular plays, explaining why spectators tend to overlook him. "He won't make the bone-crushing tackle or the great 'form' tackle that a lineman would make; he might just grab a shoe," Billetz said.

Predictably, the nose guard position requires a person with a special combination of traits.

"Usually the kind of kids who play nose guard are well-liked, outgoing, uninhibited and reckless," Cox said.

Maybe the people in the grandstands don't notice the nose guard, but everybody on the football field certainly does.

The 'real' season begins on Friday for KHS, Declo

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — The football season is supposed to be 10 weeks long.

For Kimberly and Declo the "real" season is three weeks and the first "must" game in that 14-day span comes Friday night.

Both enter the game undefeated at 5-0. Their problems only begin with that. In the next two weeks they take turns playing Gooding and Valley. That's half of the Canyon Conference, to be sure, but those four are in a donnybrook to see which two will advance to the state playoffs — and maybe pick up a conference championship along the way.

"Considering who we have to play the next two weeks we have to consider this a must-win game for us," said Kimberly Coach Gordon Hogan. "If we can get past them, then we have a little margin for error in the next two. But if we lose this one, we could be totally out of it."

Hogan feels the season has worked out well for the Bulldogs.

"We will be as healthy as we can be. We'll be without (Pat) Ferrell and (Rod) Kendred but the rest of the players seem to be in good shape. And I think being behind at halftime last week (against Wendell) was good for us. We showed some poise in the second half and were able to do some things that have helped us attitude-wise."

Ferrell, a 180-pound linebacker-running back, is out with knee surgery on an injury sustained outside of football. Kendred, a starting guard and transfer from Montana, had to have a bone spur removed from his knee because it was affecting the ligaments.

The things that bother Hogan most about Declo are the Hornets' ability to pass and its speed and quickness defensively.

"I feel that we (defensive secondary) have been tested. Filer threw quite a bit against us and Murtaugh passed 30 times in our game. But I think maybe Declo might have a little better throwing game.

"Our plan is to take away the run and make them throw," Hogan said, "and then put all the pressure we can on (quarterback Kelly) Kidd. I think we have the people up front who can give him some trouble but he's also very quick and can run away from us, too."

Hogan said he would like to throw the ball a little more against Declo, noting three-year starter Rocky Eller "is having an exceptional year. But we lost five good receivers from last year's team and while our younger guys are improving, we haven't caught the ball well in the last couple of games."

"I'd have to agree with Coach Hogan that this is a pretty important ball game," Declo's Mike Matthews said with a smile.

"We've got four tough ball games left this season and I feel like Hogan that you can't really foresee a guy getting by all four. Valley's met its defeat and it's bound to bounce back. We've got Kimberly, Valley, Gooding and then Wendell in a row and every one of them could figure into the championship.

But Don't Bet On Them

Cincinnati tightens west division race

By United Press International

National League

In case you haven't noticed, there's quite a race going on in the National League West.

Ron Oester tripled to begin a two-run sixth inning and singled home a run during a two-run seventh Wednesday night to enable the Cincinnati Reds to move within a half-game of the West lead with a 5-2 victory over the first-place Houston Astros.

The teams are scheduled to play the second game of their two-game series Thursday night.

Mario Soto, 11-9, surrendered just five hits, striking out three and walking two, before weakening in the ninth. Tom Hume finished and earned his 13th save. Vern Ruhle, 4-6, suffered the loss.

With the score tied 1-1 in the sixth, Oester opened with a triple to center. One out later, Dave Collins stroked an RBI single. Collins was forced at second on Ken Griffey's grounder but Dave Concepcion ripped an RBI double down the left-field line.

Cesar Cedeno pulled Houston within 3-2 with a solo homer in the seventh but Cincinnati added two runs in the bottom of the inning off Dave Smith. Joe Nolan walked, Ray Knight doubled and Nolan scored on an error by catcher Alan Ashby on the throw to the plate. Knight moved to third on the error and scored on a single by Oester.

Houston opened a 1-0 lead in the third on a homer by Craig Reynolds. The Reds tied the score in the fifth on a home run by George Foster, his 21st.

Elsewhere in the NL, Atlanta crushed San Francisco 9-2, Montreal edged Pittsburgh 3-2, New York downed Chicago 2-1 and Philadelphia dumped St. Louis 8-5.

Atlanta 9, San Francisco 2

At Atlanta, Larry McWilliams tossed an eight-hitter and Bob Horner and Dale Murphy lofted home runs for the Braves.

Montreal 3, Pittsburgh 2

At Pittsburgh, Larry Parrish tripled home two runs and scored a third to help the Expos snap a three-game losing streak and take over first place once again in the East. Bill Gullickson, 7-8, picked up the victory, surrendering two runs on four hits in six innings.

New York 2, Chicago 1

At New York, Lee Mazzilli's pinch hit single in the ninth inning drove in John Stearns from second base with the game-winner to lift the Mets.

Philadelphia 8, St. Louis 5

At Philadelphia, Lonnie Smith doubled home the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning to help the Phillies knock St. Louis out of first place in the East. The loss, combined with Montreal's victory over Pittsburgh, moved the Expos into first place by a half-game. St. Louis, which had won four straight games, issued 13 walks.

Volleyball

Minico sweeps match over arch-rival Burley

RUPERT — Minico jumped into command early and rolled to a two-game volleyball victory over cross-river rival Burley Wednesday night.

The Spartans took the first game 15-2 and the second 15-9.

"The girls started hot and stayed that way," said Coach Clark Muscat. "We didn't have any real individual standouts because all of the girls did well. It was a team effort. They played off and set it up like it's supposed to be done."

Minico travels to Jerome at 4 p.m. Friday for a dual match.

Wood River splits triangular

REXBURG — Wood River came out with a split decision during an invasion of eastern Idaho.

Madison defeated the Wolverines 15-11, 15-5 in the first game with Wood River rebounding to topple Rigby 15-6, 16-3.

"Madison definitely was the best A-2 team we've seen this year," said Coach Dave Neumann. "But I don't know. I still feel like we should have shown better against them."

He noted a late arrival at the gymnasium didn't give the Wolverines much warm-up time and "we didn't start playing until the final few points of the second game. And then we've gone all week without (setter) Alona Wilson (jammed thumb) and that hurts us."

The Wood River junior varsity sweep their games, toppling Madison 15-12, 15-11 and Rigby 15-6, 15-11.

Wood River will invade Buhl at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Kite, Trevino favored in Texas Open

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (UPI) — Defending champion Lee Trevino and leading money-winner Tom Kite are the favorites in the 52nd annual Texas Open that begins Thursday, but British Open champion Bill Rogers has just as much at stake in the $250,000 tournament.

Rogers missed the cut in his first five starts this year but after making adjustments in his game, he has turned 1981 into his best year.

Besides winning the British Open, Rogers also has captured the Sea Pines Heritage Classic and the World Series of Golf to put him in the running for the PGA Player of the Year award, which Tom Watson has captured the past four years.

He also won the Suntory Open in Japan and a triumph over the par-70, 6,525-yard Oak Hills Country Club course would give him three consecutive victories. Rogers, who has earned $270,411 in 1981, also tied for second in the U.S. Open and and has recorded eight top-10 finishes.

"A win here would be important, not only for the Player of the Year honor but just because it's a Texas tournament and a lot of people from my hometown will be here," said Rogers. The first prize in San Antonio is $45,000.

Kite, who is having his biggest year and leads the tour with $355,724, will also be trying to protect his lead for the Vardon Trophy, symbolic of the year's best stroke average.

Kite has a 69.94 stroke-average to lead Bruce Lietzke's 70.10. Lietzke, another favorite, is also the fourth-leading money-winner with $344,911.

Ray Floyd, who trails Kite by less than $1,000, and Watson, who has earned $345,660, are through playing this year.

Lietzke still has the Southern Open and the Pensacola Open to overtake Kite on the earnings list.

Kite, the winner of the Inverrary Classic, has had his most consistent year. He has finished eighth or better in 17 of his last 19 starts and has 19 top-10 finishes this year. He has recorded three second-place and two third-place finishes.

Trevino, who won last year with a 15-under-par 265, said he felt no pressure to repeat.

"Actually there's not as much pressure on me to repeat because in the eyes of most people, they think you can't win twice," the popular Mexican said. "Even though — I — haven't practiced as much for this tournament as last year, I know the course and have the feeling that I've already won here."

Ben Crenshaw, who has not had a good year, also is entered. Craig Stadler and Curtis Strange are the other top-10 money-winners among the 156 participants.

"If there is an advantage maybe we have it," Matthews said. "We play this one away and then the last three at home. That has to be some advantage. Even if we happen to lose this one, we should be in pretty good shape because I think it's easier to get back up after a loss when you're on your own field."

After several years of having the biggest team in the league, Declo is one of the smallest — a point that bothered Matthews prior to the season. So far his fears have been allayed.

"That can be attributed to the kids. They've done what we've told them. They've gone beyond the call of just wanting it. They're taking coaching very well."

"I can remember some of our big teams," he said. "They thought they could get by on muscles. But when you're putting your life on the line on every play because you only weigh 145, they tend to listen to everything you say."

Matthews said quickness figures into the Hornets' success but not speed.

"We don't have a lot of speed but some of these kids are very quick. Rod Buttars, our fullback, at three steps is as quick as there is. Our guards, Terry Long and Mike Martindale, neither is fast but they are quick. And those that might be a little slow are smart. That helps.

"Kelly Kidd is the only one we've clocked under five flat in the 40 so you know our speed isn't as good as a lot of teams," he said.

"I think our biggest worry is Hogan's belly," Matthew said with a laugh. "I mean their belly series. (Rocky) Eller's a threat to pass or run. You have to get him down because he can get away and get them some yards. Defensively they have two fine defensive ends and in our offense if we don't contain the ends we're in trouble."

Matthews hopes history is working for him.

"Two years ago they beat us 30-27 with a 21-yard play with 21 seconds left. Last year we played them a pretty good game but lost 8-0. The year before when they had the super ball club (8-1) we beat them 26-6. They're two up on us and so maybe it's our turn."

Royals clinch berth in second-half playoffs

By United Press International

Kansas City Royals Manager Dick Howser said he is thinking more about the fact his team clinched an American League playoff spot than the "nostalgia" of having played in the last baseball game at Met Stadium.

"It's nostalgic, but I've got more important things to think about," said Howser, whose Royals defeated the Minnesota Twins 5-2 Wednesday to sweep their three-game series. "This has been a good baseball park and a good baseball city."

Next season the Twins and other Minnesota pro sports teams move into a new domed stadium in downtown Minneapolis.

Despite overcast skies and a constant drizzle, 15,900 fans attended the last baseball game in the 25-year-old Met Stadium.

American League

Kansas City still could be beaten out for first place in the AL West by Oakland, which won the first-half title, but the Royals still would earn a post-season berth because they are sure of at least second place in the second season.

"We've been doing three things well now — hitting, pitching and defense," Howser said. "We're not taking anything for granted. We still have to win. We're not resting anybody or doing anything differently."

Clint Hurdle hit a two-run homer and Willie Wilson had three singles and two RBI to back Larry Gura's four-hitter for the Royals' victory.

Gura, 11-7, struck out three and walked none en route to his 12th complete game. He retired 16 straight batters before giving up a ninth-inning leadoff single to Gary Ward.

The Royals, last year's AL champions, pounded out 16 hits off four Minnesota pitchers.

Wilson and John Wathan each had an RBI single in the second inning, but the Twins tied the score in their half on Pete Mackanin's two-run homer. Gary Gaetti singled before Mackanin's fourth home run of the year.

Hurdle homered into the right-field seats after Hal McRae opened the fourth with a single off Fernando Arroyo, 7-10. U.L. Washington doubled and scored on Wilson's single for the third run of the inning.

The game completed the Twins' 21-year tenure in suburban Metropolitan Stadium, which will be demolished next year when the club moves to a domed stadium nearing completion in downtown Minneapolis.

Oakland 3, Toronto 0

Mike Norris fired a three-hitter and Rob Picciolo blasted a solo homer to lead the Oakland A's to a 3-0 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays in their final home game of the regular season.

The victory will likely earn Norris the starting job in the American League West playoffs beginning Tuesday.

Alfredo Griffin singled to center tr and walked one.

Picciolo homered to lead off the third, giving Norris the only run he needed, and the A's added a pair of runs in the fourth on a single by Keith Drumright, a double by Dave McKay, a single by Jeff Newman and a steal of home by McKay.

Chicago 10, California 3

Greg Luzinski singled in two runs in a seven-run second inning and added a two-run homer in the sixth to lead the Chicago White Sox to a 10-3 victory over the California Angels.

Luzinski's single highlighted a Sox outburst as Chicago sent 12 men to the plate in the second and knocked out starter Dave Frost, 1-8.

Detroit rained out

The Detroit Tigers and Baltimore Orioles, both in the running for the second-half title in the American League East, were rained out and the game was rescheduled for Thursday.

The Tigers were leading 1-0 after two innings when the rain came.

Cleveland rained out

The Cleveland Indians and New York Yankees were canceled by rain and will not be rescheduled since both teams have been eliminated from contention in the second half of the season.

Texas 3, Seattle 1

Knuckle-baller Charlie Hough subdued Seattle on three hits Wednesday night, enabling the Texas Rangers to score a 3-1 victory over Seattle for their third straight triumph over the Mariners.

Ainge feels Expos freed him in June

NEW YORK (UPI) — Third baseman Danny Ainge of the Toronto Blue Jays testified Wednesday that he believes he was released from his contract last June when General Manager Peter Bavasi advised him "not to worry about the commitment."

On June 10, the day after he was drafted by the Boston Celtics of the NBA, Ainge said he told Bavasi of his basketball preference and quoted the Toronto GM as replying: "I should do what I want to do to be happy and not to worry about the commitment."

The reference was to the $300,000 Ainge was to receive for signing with Toronto and a clause in the bonus agreement barring him from playing basketball.

Ainge, testifying in U.S. District Court in Manhattan at the trial of the contract dispute between the Blue Jays and the Celtics over his services, also said even though he is still playing for Toronto, he believes he will be free to join the Celtics once the baseball season is over.

Ainge told the jury that he and his lawyer have gone as far in negotiations with the Celtics as to propose a 3-year contract calling for $600,000, $700,000 and $800,000, plus an agreement by the Celtics to pay Toronto $350,000.

Toronto has said that if Ainge does not return next season it wants to negotiate a settlement that will allow it to recoup the approximate $500,000 invested in Ainge.

Ainge said he first gave serious consideration to a basketball career last year during his standout performance for Brigham Young.

"I kind of wished I hadn't signed a baseball contract," said the 22-year old All-America guard, who batted below .190 for the Blue Jays all season.

Ainge's testimony followed that of Red Auerbach, The Celtics' president and GM said he was aware that his club was twice notified by the Blue Jays that Ainge was Toronto property and that to negotiate with him was to induce a breach of contract.

Auerbach testified the warnings were received in February and on June 9, but that he was too involved in the title race in February or the aftermath of the championship in June to pay much attention to the legal problems involved.

All that mattered to him, he said, was whether Boston could use a penetrating guard like Ainge if they could get him, and whether Ainge wanted to play basketball.

"The main thing was whether Danny Ainge wanted to play basketball," Auerbach said. "If he did, I couldn't dream of anyone not letting him do it."

Minico Coach Red Halverson finds it easier to coach with age and better talent in his second term at the Spartan helm

Coaching's wonderful, second time around

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Minico Coach Red Halverson turns a bit musical when he discusses his second term as head football coach of the Spartans.

His first tune is: football is wonderful the second time around.

When Halverson was first at the Minico helm, his teams didn't win often. This time, however, only one team has beaten the Spartans — and he knows why.

"How does that song go?" he asks. "Older women make better lovers or something like that? Then I guess it's older men make better football coaches."

Getting a little more serious, Halverson said "I think it's just because now I'm an older head. When I was younger I didn't know what I was doing. But I thought I did."

"I should have stayed with (ex-Minico coach) Bill Matthews' single wing and not messed around with that belly and T stuff," he said.

What Halverson actually is saying that his total view of the high school game has changed.

In his first reign, Halverson played it quite conservatively on offense and one year went with a game plan that included alternating fullbacks. He, of course, did have some success but he didn't have the overall power to carve holes in bigger lines.

This year he cites the single wing as the reason for his success but there is more to it. In the first place, throwing about 60 percent of the time, Minico uses the single wing more as a shotgun. In fact, it was pretty close to a shotgun against Twin Falls because he was closer to a double wing and most of the throwing was short and to backs out of the backfield.

And he's quick to point out another thing.

"It doesn't hurt when you've got a guy like (Darrell) Tracy to throw it," Halverson said of the senior tailback-quarterback who has had an excellent year in throwing and has shown great accuracy.

There's still more, however.

"There's no question that we have a lot better talent than we had before. The second year I was here (the first time), we had ideal single wing material and I didn't even know it. Now I think single wing all the time. When I see someone like that (Pocatello fullback Dave Romasko, I think 'gee, wouldn't he be a great single wing tailback.'"

In the end, Halverson admits talent makes the difference.

"When you win you have good talent. That's all there is to it. We've got some. Not as many as we'd like and not as big as we'd like but they are all doing a good job for us.

"I think they're taking a little more pride in themselves every week," he said. "I think we're still coming along. We're seeing improvement almost every day in practice and improvement every week (in games). They're working. Everything we tell them they're working on."

Well, then, does Minico have it all?

"I think maybe we lack a real killer instinct," he said. "Like last Friday we had a chance to put Twin Falls away and we didn't do it. We let them come back and get it in a position of maybe tying or beating us."

This week the Spartans run into another tough test, not unusual in the well-balanced Gem State Conference.

The Skyline Grizzlies will be in Rupert at 8 p.m. with their backs to the wall. Minico is running undefeated in the league along with Idaho Falls. The Grizzlies have one loss now and can't afford another.

The one commanding point of Skyline is that although it is 3-2, it hasn't been out of any game. It lost by only five to Capital. Last week it lost by one to Highland. The week before it beat a late two-point conversion pass to nip Twin Falls by one.

"We think they are a very competitive football team," Halverson said of the Grizzlies. "From the other coaches I've talked to, they are apparently pretty tough. They ran a different offense against Twin Falls than they did against Caldwell so we don't really know what to expect."

Skyline's line is fairly equal with Minico's, being perhaps a bit bigger defensively. And the Grizzlies have the ability to hit from three directions offensively.

"We know that their fullback (Tim Andrus) is a good one. He ran well against Twin Falls (91 yards in the first half)," Halverson said. "So we have to be ready for him up the middle and then they send (Scott) Birkenbine outside on sweeps. I understand Skyline is throwing quite a bit more than it has in past years and most of that from rollouts."

Arkansas strives for No. 23 against TCU

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Arkansas has defeated TCU 22 consecutive times, the longest winning streak by a Southwest Conference school over another in history, but Horned Frogs Coach F.A. Dry contends the big game for his team is not the one with the Razorbacks.

"No," Dry said in a telephone news conference Wednesday. "When you're in Texas, Texas is the big game. If we were in Arkansas, Arkansas would be the big game."

Dry said his approach for Saturday's game with the 16th-ranked Razorbacks in Fort Worth was to get his players well following last week's 20-9 loss to SMU.

"We're trying to regroup and get ready for an entirely different type of football team," he said.

The losing steak, Dry said, had no bearing in getting his team ready for Saturday.

"I've been so busy I don't hear it (talk of the losing streak)," Dry said. "The football team isn't concerned with it."

Arkansas Coach Lou Holtz also told the news conference that his team had not been talking about its winning streak against the Horned Frogs.

"I've just mentioned it to our squad in passing," he said. "The only thing that (losing streak) means is that for the last 22 years TCU has not gone undefeated."

Dry said what concerned him was Arkansas' "solid running game."

"I don't want them to have the football all day," he said. "That's one of my biggest concerns. Arkansas halfback Gary) Anderson can break one at any time and that has to be a big concern."

Two years ago TCU had Arkansas beaten until a last-minute pass interception and a field goal enabled the Razorbacks to escape 16-13, and Dry said that was one of his most disappointing losses ever.

Holtz said that game did not have much to do with preparing for this year's game.

"I think what helps our preparation is the overall atmosphere."

Olympic committee awards 1988 games to Seoul, Calgary

BADEN-BADEN, West Germany (UPI) — Seoul, picking up late support, scored an unexpectedly easy victory over Japanese rival Nagoya Wednesday in the election to stage the 1988 Summer Olympic Games.

The South Korean capital, the first city from a developing country to be awarded the Games, won by 52 votes to 27, with two of the members of the International Olympic Committee abstaining and one absent through illness.

The three-way fight for the 1988 Winter Games ended with Calgary, Alberta, after four unsuccessful bids, finally emerging triumphant, defeating Falun of Sweden 48-31 after the Italian candidate Cortina D'Ampezzo had been eliminated on the first vote.

Calgary polled 35 votes the first time around against Falun's 25 and Cortina's 18.

Nagoya had started as the strong favorite in its bid, having the impetus of Japan's successful staging of the 1964 Tokyo Summer Olympics and the 1972 Sapporo Winter Games.

But the IOC members, impressed by Seoul's presentation Tuesday, came out in support of the Olympic philosophy of rotating the Olympics and voted overwhelmingly in favor of the Koreans.

Seoul's mayor Young-Su Park, who signed the contract with the IOC to stage the Games, was not surprised at the success of his city's bid but admitted the margin of victory was unexpected.

"I knew we would win," he said, "but I never believed it would be by so much. The IOC members have placed their faith in us and we will not let them down. Today is a day Seoul will remember for always. I was so excited it was difficult signing my name."

The Mayor reaffirmed his Government's pledge to guarantee "free entry to all and hoped the Olympics would bring about closer ties between South and North Korea.

"When West Germany held the 1972 games in Munich, an agreement was reached in 1971 between West and East Germany. By hosting the 1988 Games we hope this will serve as a great momentum to open dialogue between our two countries and the peace will settle on us.

"Our country is divided at the moment, but we have 5,000 years of history, we share the same language and we are the same people."

He said the curfew in South Korea would be lifted during the Games, just the same as it was for holidays. Sang-Ho Cho, President of the Korean Olympic Association, also referred to the possibility of closer links between North and South.

He said he had written to his North Korean counterpart on June 19 suggesting competitions between each other with a view to selecting teams representing the whole of Korea.

"I am still waiting for his response. But I shall not stop my efforts. I will continue until he responds affirmatively," he added.

Cho confirmed that Seoul would include table tennis and tennis in the 1988 Games if the IOC decided to make them Olympic sports when it discussed the Olympic program later this week.

The Nagoya delegates appeared stunned at the outcome and were angered at the presence of a group of protestors from the city, who paraded outside the Baden-Baden casino with placards saying, "No 1988 Games for Nagoya."

For Calgary, the waiting was the worst part.

When IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch read out the results of the secret ballot, the Canadian delegates leaped to their feet and let out a wild cheer more in keeping with the Calgary Stampede than with the opulent surroundings of the casino.

"You can tell how we feel, you don't have to ask," said Bob Niven, president of the Calgary Olympic Development Association. The association's chairman, Frank King, said, "We have waited for almost 30 years for this. It was Canada's seventh bid for the Winter Games and Calgary's fourth."

Stressing support for the Games from Calgary's inhabitants, King said 80,000 of the city's 600,000 population had purchased memberships of the development association.

"The money is in place, the blueprints are in place and the enthusiasm of the people is there," King said.

He said a $30 million Olympic development fund would be set up to help finance events and sites on a permanent basis, starting with the 1988 Olympics, and they would use the fund to help Olympic athletes to travel to Canada.

"If the IOC's travel subsidies are insufficient to allow all the champions who deserve to come to Canada to do so, we will use the fund so that the cost is no greater than if they have been going to Cortina or Falun," King said.

Asked whether Canada's boycott of the 1980 Moscow Olympics had been an obstacle, King said the IOC had taken the stance that the whole question of the boycott was now in the past.

He noted that the two winning candidates to host the 1988 Olympics had not been punished for their Moscow absence.

The major surprise in the voting for the Winter Games was the comparative failure of Cortina, which staged the 1956 Winter Olympics. The Italians had been considered Calgary's closest rivals.

"We were very disappointed, especially about going out on the first ballot," said Cortina Mayor Cesare Lacedelli. "But we will probably try again for 1992."

"I am not disappointed, just empty," a Falun delegate said. "We did very well, but we lost a tough fight."

Another member of the Swedish city's delegation, however, was so disappointed he had to wipe away tears streaming down his face before congratulating the celebrating Canadians.

Immediately after the elections, Samaranch sent telgrams to South Korean President Chun Doo Hwan and Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau to officially inform them that cities in their countries had been awarded the 1988 Olympic Games.

Thumbless boxing glove will be tested

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay (UPI) — A thumbless boxing glove, designed to reduce eye injuries, Wednesday will get its first test in a bout in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Cuban boxer Gavilan Gonzales and Ray Dennis of the United States will put the gloves to the test for the first time in a professional match sponsored by Promotion Inc.

The thumbless glove was designed by Jose Laurino, a sports columnist for El Dia newspaper of Montevideo. Laurino eliminated the separate cavity for the thumb, which in his glove is enclosed with the rest of the fingers.

Laurino said 60 percent of the world's boxers have had to retire due to eye problems. He said that the risk of injuries to the eyes can be reduced with his glove.

San Diego trade for Saints' Chandler

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Looking to fill the hole created by the departure of John Jefferson, the San Diego Chargers Wednesday announced the acquisition of wide receiver Wes Chandler from New Orleans in a trade that gives the Saints wide receiver Aundra Thompson and two 1982 draft choices.

Gene Klein, Chargers president and majority owner, said that Chandler, a four-year pro from Florida, signed a contract with the club at the same terms he had with the Saints and was to report to the Chargers later Wednesday.

"He's achieved a lot with the Saints and we look forward to his becoming a part of 'Air Coryell,'" Klein said.

Blocking fullback returns to Houston

HOUSTON (UPI) — Tim Wilson, the fullback who paved the way for Earl Campbell for three years, returned to the Houston Oilers' starting backfield in practice Wednesday.

Head coach Ed Biles said he probably would sign a free agent to replace traded running back Rob Carpenter.

Two Boiseans transfer to Boise State

BOISE (UPI) — Two former Idaho high school football stars are leaving Pac-10 universities to spend their final seasons with Big Sky Conference member Boise State.

Paul DiLulo said Tuesday he has enrolled at Boise State and plans on playing football for the school next fall in his final year of eligibility. DiLulo, a former Boise High player, was Southern California's starting fullback in 1980.

Rich Panzeri, another former Boise High star, is expected to return to Idaho to play with Boise State, according to the Idaho Statesman. Panzeri, a quarterback and defensive back, will redshirt this fall along with former Oregon State teammate Carl Keever, a linebacker, and play football for Boise State next year.

"I would say the best description is he (DiLulo) could be a devastating fullback," Boise State coach Jim Criner said. "He'll compete with the kids in the program. Every football player should earn his place in the program. Paul will be expected to earn his."

DiLulo said he was "totally happy" with USC, but he indicated the death of his father in Boise last fall had an impact on his decision, and he said he missed Boise.

College finds cafe tops training table

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — A funny thing happened on the way to the University of Louisville athletic training table: the school found out it can feed its student-athletes cheaper at a popular restaurant than at campus cafeterias.

"Basically, the food is certainly going to be as good," said Kenneth Lindsey, Louisville's associate athletic director. "It may be prepared a little more to their liking and served a little nicer."

In addition, the surroundings at Masterson's restaurant near the UL campus should be an improvement over the "crowded and overtaxed" campus cafeterias, Lindsey said.

But the university's primary motivation in switching its student-athletes on scholarships to Masterson's was the promise of savings for the athletic department, which is struggling to meet an administration-imposed four-year deadline to end persistent deficits in the Louisville football program.

Niki Lauda calls off race retirement

PARMA, Italy (UPI) — Former Formula One driving champion Niki Lauda of Austria announced Wednesday he is returning to auto racing next season after a two-year retirement.

"I don't know yet what car I'll race in," Lauda said during a news conference at the offices of his chief sponsor, the Italian Parmalat dairy products company.

Italian newspapers say Lauda had been in contact with the Brabham team in addition to McLaren, whose car he tested two weeks ago at Britain's Donnington race track.

"I'll be starting from zero," he said. "Nobody should expect that Lauda will come back and go like a bomb right away.

"I've been out of action for two years and I don't know the cars, which in the meantime have changed a lot," he said. "For me, it's a new beginning."

Shotgun blast ends rookie's pro career

HOUSTON (UPI) — Rockets top draft choice Ed Turner Wednesday said from his hospital bed in Buffalo, N.Y., he won't be able to play basketball anymore on an ankle shattered by a shotgun blast.

"I won't be playing basketball anymore. That's what they say," Turner said. "I'll have to have a bone graft just to be able to walk."

He said the shooting occurred Monday on a street near his home, one day before the promising 6-foot-7 forward out of Texas A&I University was to fly to Houston for the Rockets' rookie training camp.

Buffalo police Wednesday said no charges had been filed. In fact, they were unaware of the shooting.

Bear denies using 'double standard'

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (UPI) — Alabama Coach Bear Bryant Wednesday denied published reports that there's a double standard in the treatment of black Crimson Tide players.

At his weekly news conference, Bryant denied a report in Wednesday's Atlanta Constitution that misbehaving black players have been punished in public while white players' mistakes have been "swept under the rug."

"To me, I don't care whether they are white, black, brown, purple, green or yellow," said Bryant, who is just five wins away from being the most successful college coach of all time. "If they have a problem I hope they come to me.

"I think they all know that whatever I'm going to do, I'm going to be fair. That's what I've done and what I'm going to do."

Earnest Reese of the Constitution quoted unidentified black players as saying three other players missed curfew the night All-American linebacker Thomas Boyd was late returning to the athletic dorm.

Boyd was put out of the athletic dorm and demoted to the scout team.

Bryant confirmed that other players violated the rules, but he said they too were punished.

"We had three others that were late and I took their (complimentary) tickets," he said. "That's $48. Whether that was enough or not, I don't know."

The following weekend, two other black players, running backs Linnie Patrick and Charley Williams, suffered a similar punishment for not showing up for a session with trainers.

"What's got a lot of the brothers on the team upset is the fact that every time something bad happens to one of us, it's in the papers," an unidentified player told the Constitution.

"If it's one of the other players, it's swept under the rug — you don't hear anything about it," he added.

Another black player said assistant coach Jack Rutledge knew of violations committed by white players and did nothing.

"Several players got drunk and threw up in his presence, and he didn't do anything about it," he was quoted as saying.

Rutledge told the newspaper he doesn't view drunkenness as a "violation of the football team's guidelines."

"The way we're playing," Bryant responded, "if we don't have (morale problems) now, we're going to have them and I'm going to cause them. I'm going to be the morale factor — let's put it that way."

Bryant indicated the excessive publicity was the result of increased media attention on the Tide due to his chase of Amos Alonzo Stagg's record.

"If they (black players) have a problem, I don't think it can be resolved through the Atlanta paper or through any of the other papers," said the coach.

"There's just one guy to come to and that's me," he said. "Hopefully they will and if they don't, I'll be going to them."

Bryant said that, in years past, "We've had things happen that we take action on that nobody ever knows about. But this year it seems like you have to go into the bathroom and close the door."

Mancini feels he can beat Arguello

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (UPI) — When Alexis Arguello won the world featherweight championship in 1974, 13-year-old Ray Mancini was writing poems about his dad.

On Saturday, Mancini fights Arguello for the World Boxing Council lightweight championship, but he says the vast difference in experience won't mean a thing.

"I feel I'm very ready for this fight," Mancini said Wednesday. "I'm sure he has a lot more experience, but I've got the momentum going. I feel like I can handle everything he has. And I can give him some things he can't handle."

Not everybody agrees. Oddsmakers have made Arguello a 3-to-1 favorite for the title bout, and many boxing experts believe Mancini's handlers, heady with the national publicity their fighter has received, may have pushed him too fast.

Mancini's trainer, Dave Wolf, thinks the 20-year-old Ohio resident has earned his title shot.

"Sure, Ray is a charismatic kid," Wolf said. "But I don't think that that's why we're here. We could have chosen five stiffs, padded the record a little bit more, used his teen-age smile and still got a title fight.

"But having beaten the No. 6- and the No. 3-ranked contenders, and not lost a round, he's here on merit. He's the WBC's No. 3-ranked contender and we have no doubts that he's ready."

Since his professional career began in 1979, Mancini has been the subject of national magazine articles and a massive television buildup, mostly because of his affection for his father, former lightweight contender Lenny Mancini.

The challenger wants to win the lightweight crown for his father, whose own title aspirations were thwarted when he was drafted by the Army in 1942. The military refused to grant him a month's leave to fight champion Sammy Angott, and a shrapnel wound he later received in France effectively ended his career.

"This is my only reason for fighting," said Mancini, who as a youngster became obsessed with his father's ring career and wrote a poem entitled "I Walk In Your Shadow" about the elder Mancini. "If I win, it's his more than mine."

But Mancini, who brings a 20-0 record (15 knockouts) into the ring, will have to get by Arguello, a 29-year-old boxing legend, to make his dream come true.

Arguello, a Nicaraguan who left his country after boxing was outlawed, boasts a 71-4 record (57 knockouts), has fought in 16 title bouts (winning 15) against boxing's finest, and has won world championships at three weight levels.

Arguello said he realized Mancini "wants to do something for his father," but pointed out that he also has his reasons for wanting to hold onto the title.

"I still have a heart, I still have a big family to support and boxing is the only thing I do best," he explained. "That's good motivation for me. If I stay champion, I lead a good life. If I lose my title, it's going to be very hard."

Carpenter decides to report to Giants

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (UPI) — New York Coach Ray Perkins Wednesday praised newly acquired Rob Carpenter as a winning football player and said the recalcitrant Houston running back would report to the Giants Thursday.

To make room for Carpenter, the Giants released veteran tackle Tim Stokes, who was signed as a free agent Sept. 9. Stokes suffered through a miserable game against Washington Sept. 13 filling in for injured Brad Benson and Jeff Weston and was used sparingly the past two weeks.

Carpenter, in his fifth pro season, was acquired by the Giants Tuesday in exchange for a draft choice but the 26-year-old back originally balked at the deal and said he was mulling retirement rather than joining his new club — which is in desperate need of a consistent running attack.

Perkins, who spoke to Carpenter Wednesday morning, received another call later in the day and said the 6-foot-1, 230-pound halfback has agreed to report to the club Thursday.

"I definitely think he could help us," said Perkins. "I inquired about his availability during our first two weeks of training camp but the Oilers said no.

"Now he's become available and I'm very pleased. I think he's a real good receiver, but he's even more than that — he's a ballplayer. He's got good, not great, speed and he goes about things in an intense manner. I think he's a clutch, pressure player. He's a winner."

The Giants, 2-2, are averaging just 2.8 yards per rushing attempt and Carpenter, who led all AFC rookies with 652 yards in 1977, finished second in rushing behind Earl Campbell among Houston backs last year while catching 43 passes.

Carpenter, who claimed he was being made a scapegoat for Houston's unimpressive start this year, could play as early as Sunday, when the Giants play host to Green Bay, but Perkins said he's "not counting on anything from him," at this point.

Perkins, who said he may reactivate top defensive end Gary Jeter from injured reserve on Friday, termed the next few weeks as crucial and emphasized the importance of beating the mistake-prone Packers, 1-3.

"This will be a big game for us to say the least," Perkins said. "In my opinion, the Packers have the best two receivers James Lofton and John Jefferson) we'll see all year and possibly the best two in the game. They're gonna put a little added challenge on our corners.

"The next three weeks (Green Bay-St. Louis-Seattle) we're playing teams I think we should beat so it's a big three weeks for us to get some consistency and momentum."

Stocks post 3rd gain in row

By FRANK W. SLUSSER
United Press International

NEW YORK — Stocks, overcoming profit-takers, registered their third consecutive gain Wednesday.

They advanced again as the nation prepared to enter the new Reagan economic era and the beginning of the 1982 fiscal year.

Trading was slow.

Wall Street and the rest of the world appeared nervous as the Reagan program of steep tax cuts and spending declines was set to go into effect today. The president was calling for more paring of social programs.

Republican leaders told Reagan, scheduled to hold a news conference at noon MDT today, that further cuts in defense spending were probable. Reagan didn't like the message but reportedly was not surprised by it.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which fluctuated throughout the day, managed to gain 2.09 points to 849.98. The three-day rally has carried the Dow 25.97 points higher despite doomsday predictions by forecaster Joseph Granville.

Foreign markets finished the day with mixed results. Among the largest, London finished lower and Tokyo scored a second consecutive gain.

Experts still believe the Dow will slide toward Friday's 16-month low of 824 that followed a 188-point drop since June 15 and a 200-point skid since late April.

The New York Stock Exchange index added 0.15 to 67 and the price of an average share increased 6 cents. Advances edged declines, 751-747, among the 1,875 issues traded at 2 p.m. MDT.

Big Board volume dropped to 40,700,000 shares from 49,800,000 shares traded Tuesday. Analysts said trading was slowed by the Rosh Hashana observance. They predicted the pace would pick up a bit today.

The American Stock Exchange index tacked on 0.90 to 292.86 and the price of a share added 4 cents. Advances topped declines, 310-267, among the 763 issues traded. Volume totaled 4,750,000 shares compared with 5,880,000 Tuesday.

Investors are watching Washington, where the Senate late Tuesday night approved a measure to raise the government's debt ceiling to a record trillion dollars.

A major battle loomed over Reagan's proposed $16 billion in additional budget cuts. Wall Street has indicated the cuts are inadequate.

Budget Director David Stockman said the government would have to borrow about $80 billion in fiscal 1982 and warned huge federal borrowing would abort the administration's economic plans, unless Congress cuts spending.

Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates said Reagan's policies will not produce a recession but will boost unemployment, federal budget deficits and interest rates.

The government's latest index of leading economic indicators decreased 0.5 percent. The report said the July index was revised from a decline to a 0.4 percent advances. New home sales fell 14.2 percent in August. But September farm prices dropped 2.2 percent.

Interest rates remained high and the Wharton forecast said the prime rate, now 19 to 19½ percent, probably would go past 20 percent before yearend.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter at 4 p.m. totaled 44,566,200 shares, compared with 56,108,720 traded Tuesday.

The National Association of Securities Dealers's NASDAQ index of over the counter stocks rose 1.52 to 180.03.

On NYSE the trading floor, General Portland Cement soared 17 to 45 after the firm signed a definitive agreement with Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd. to buy all of its outstanding stock for $47 a share.

Chicago Milwaukee Corp. climbed 7¼ to 46½. An investor group said it has raised its stake in Chicago Milwaukee to 26.1 percent.

American Telephone & Telegraph, the most widely held stock in the nation, was the most active issue, up ⅜ to 57⅞ after a block of 100,000 shares at 57¾.

Storage Technology, a volatile issue the past several days, was second, off 1¼ to 32⅝ in trading that included a block of 109,800 shares at 32⅝. Sony Corp. was third, off ¾ to 16⅝.

Castle & Cooke slipped ¼ to 9⅞ after a block of 368,700 shares at 9½. The company Tuesday predicted it would have a first-quarter loss of $6 million.

Colt Industries, which skidded 2¾ points Tuesday, dropped another 3¼ to 77 and Penn Central jumped 3½ to 38⅝. A Penn Central shareholder group, including the Hunt Brothers of Texas, said it may challenge PC's proposed $1.4 billion purchase of Colt.

Clorox fell ⅞ to 9⅞ and Purex eased ¼ to 18¼. Published reports said there is speculation Procter & Gamble is about to enter the bleach manufacturing field for the first time in 13 years. PG stock rose ¾ to 73¾.

Hillenbrand Industries advanced 1⅞ to 41⅜. The company reported third-quarter earnings of $1.92 a share versus $1.24 a year ago.

Univar jumped 2⅞ to 25½. The company Tuesday reported its second-quarter earnings rose to $1.16 a share from 48 cents a year ago.

Lone Star Industries gained 2⅜ to 26⅝ even though some analysts have lowered their earnings estimates for the company.

NLT Corp. gained 1¼ to 23⅜. The company has reiterated its opposition to American General Corp.'s plan to raise its stake in NLT to 20 to 25 percent from 9.1 percent.

On the Amex, Dome Petroleum was the most active issue, off ¼ to 11⅝. Data Products followed, up ¼ to 21¼ after a block of 150,000 shares at 20. Numac Oil & Gas was third, up 5⅛ to 30.

Petro-Lewis advanced ¾ to 16¾. The company said it plans to repurchase up to one million of its own shares in the open market over the next 12 months.

'Articulated' bus in works from GM

PONTIAC, Mich. (UPI) — General Motors Corp. said Wednesday it has developed an "articulated" city bus, 21 feet longer than conventional rigs and with a flexible midsection that increases seating by 60 percent.

Officials of the company's GMC Truck & Coach Division said the bus can help financially troubled urban mass transit authorities cut costs.

It could also boost the fortunes of GMC, which has what division General Manager Robert W. Truxell described as a "perilously low" backlog of bus orders.

It is the first articulated bus from an American manufacturer, but similar units are built overseas and are in use in several U.S. cities.

GMC said the swivel unit connecting the front and rear sections of the bus is its own design, and GMC engineers said they consider it an improvement on those in existence.

The two sections are connected by a revolving turntable, allowing it to negotiate 90-degree turns on city streets. The diesel engine and drive wheels are located in the rear section.

GMC said it will offer the bus in lengths of 56 and 61 feet and up to 73 seats, compared with 35 and 40 feet and 46 seats in the Rapid Transit Series of conventional city buses it now builds.

Small oil producers, Phillips fight over rule

LUBBOCK, Texas (UPI) — The Texas Panhandle's economy could be "devastated" by an adverse ruling for independent oil producers in their battle with the Phillips Petroleum Co. over a rule concerning natural gas liquids, an attorney said Wednesday.

At issue is whether independent operators can include what Phillips calls natural gas liquids in oil production reports to the Texas Railroad Commission.

The independents have hired Austin, Texas, attorney Ivan Hafley and Lubbock attorney Bill Warnick to represent them at an Oct. 27 Railroad Commission hearing at which Phillips is expected to ask for an amendment to oil field rules.

The Phillips proposal would eliminate the practice by independent producers of "stripping out" natural gas condensate from their wells and reporting it as oil production. According to Railroad Commission rules, a well that produces less than one barrel of oil for each 100,000 feet of natural gas is considered a gas well.

Current field spacing rules stipulate only one gas well can be produced on a 640-acre block, but 10 oil wells can be produced on the same acreage.

If Phillips is successful in restricting independent operators from reporting natural gas — which often comes out of the ground as a liquid condensate — as part of their oil production, then many wells in the Panhandle Field would be considered gas wells. The result, the attorneys said, would be the plugging of nine of every 10 wells per 640-acre block.

Bonanza for wage earners into effect today

Answers to questions on All Savers

By BEATSON WALLACE
©Boston Globe

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, probably the biggest bonanza for the wage earner since the income tax was adopted in 1913, takes effect today.

As a result, each of us will get a modest tax cut, the first of three scheduled, and will be able to buy the new All Savers Certificate. This certificate allows the largest tax exemption for interest payments since the advent of the income tax law.

Since there has been so much hullaballoo and often misleading advertising about the All Savers, the public understandably is still confused. The following answers questions about them.

Q. What is an All-Savers Certificate?

A. It is a receipt for money deposited in a participating commercial bank, mutual savings bank, savings and loan association, cooperative savings bank or a credit union.

Q. What do you mean by "participating?"

A. Any bank or credit union issuing All-Savers must agree to use 75 percent of any new deposits for home mortgages or farm loans or financial instruments underwriting loans already issued. Many credit unions do not write mortgages, and hence will not be issuing All Savers. Practically all banks will.

Q. Does it make any difference which bank I buy an All Savers from?

A. No. It is the same product, the same interest rate at all banks. You even may deposit smaller amounts at different banks.

Q. Why deposit money in an All Savers?

A. Because interest earned, up to $1,000 for a single taxpayer and up to $2,000 for a married couple, will be exempt from federal taxes.

Q: Is the interest earned exempt from state taxes?

A. In some states, but, for example, Massachusetts taxpayers will have to pay the regular 5.375 percent levied on all bank interest, unless the legislature votes an exemption.

Q. Should everyone invest in an All Savers?

A. The conventional tax-specialist wisdom says only those in tax brackets higher than 30 percent will benefit. But this assumes a person, either a single taxpayer or a married joint filer, would invest his money in something paying a higher interest, such as a bank's six-month certificate or a money market mutual fund, although taxable. Actually, any taxpayer can benefit from the current 12.61 percent interest on an All Savers, if the money is languishing in a passbook account paying 5.5 percent and you foresee no problem freezing this deposit for one year.

Q. When should a person deposit money in an All Savers?

A. Any time between this Oct. 1 and Dec. 31, 1982. The tax exemption can be deducted in any amount on your tax returns filed in 1982, 1983 and 1984, but not more than a total of the $1,000/$2,000 for all three years.

Q. How much should I invest in an All Savers?

A. That depends entirely on the interest rate, but no more than an amount that will earn the maximum tax exemption. Those bought on Oct. 1, 2 and 3 will be paying 12.61 percent. Divide $1,000 by 12.61 percent and you get $7,930, the maximum a single person should invest in these first three days. A married taxpayer should divide $2,000 (the permissible exemption) by 12.61 percent, for a total investment of $15,860.

Q. What interest rate will the All-Savers pay after Oct. 3?

A. No one knows, perhaps higher but more likely lower since last week's Treasury bills were sold at an interest rate lower than the Treasury bill sale on Sept. 3 from which the 12.61 percent All Savers rate was computed. Actually, the only difference between the monthly All Saver interest rates is the total amount of money you will have to invest. For example, if the Oct. 5 All Savers rate is 11.5 percent, a single person would have to invest $8,695 (1,000 divided by 11.5 percent) and a married couple $17,391 (200 divided by 11.5) instead of the sums mentioned in the previous question.

Q. How will the banks pay the interest?

A. The interest will be posted to your All-Savers account monthly.

Business given chance

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Roberto C. Goizueta, chairman and chief executive officer of Coca-Cola Co., says President Reagan has given business a chance and it will have no one to blame but itself if it fails to achieve its goals.

"For years we have been promising that if allowed to operate freely we could police ourselves, act with integrity and be the primary agent of response to human need," Goizueta told the Los Angeles Society of Financial Analysts Tuesday. "Now the Reagan administration has given us the chance to put up or shut up."

Goizueta said Reagan has done what business has been asking for years — cut taxes, move out of social science and ease regulation.

"If we fail, we can't put our shortcomings on the back of government any longer," he said.

Goizueta said if business succeeds it will be because shareholders realize that some social decisions must be made that will not maximize profits.

Noting the decline in productivity, the rise in prices and increases in competition, he said that today's corporate manager faces a changed world.

"Seven or eight years ago interest rates were at 8 percent or 9 percent and companies were achieving predictable earnings growths of 12 percent to 15 percent," he said. "But those were the last years of determinism in American business."

Kuwait reduces oil prices

NICOSIA (UPI) — Kuwait is offering customers extended credit terms on oil purchases, effectively reducing by as much as $1.10 the price of a barrel of Kuwaiti crude, the oil publication Middle East Economic Survey reported Wednesday.

The Kuwaiti offer provides for an increase in the credit terms to 60 days — 30 days more than normal — for the month of September and to 90 days — 60 days above normal — from the beginning of October, MEES said.

"At current interest rates, each 30 days credit is worth around 50-55 cents," MEES said. "So the extra 60 days credit from the beginning of October onwards will be equivalent to a price reduction of some $1 to $1.10 per barrel," MEES said.

Kuwait's current official selling price is $35.50 per barrel.

Weed control now can mean higher yields later

Banvel®* herbicide stops tough broadleaf weeds that steal much needed soil moisture and nutrients.

Broadleaf weeds are greedy users of nutrients and moisture—nutrients and moisture your crops need for top yields. Stop the weeds, and your crops will have a better chance to develop higher yields.

Banvel herbicide can stop the needless loss of moisture, nutrients and yield. Banvel gives effective, economical control of deep-rooted perennial broadleaf weeds. Apply Banvel from mid-summer to fall for spot treatment of weed problems on fallow land, wheat stubble, or cropland rotated to wheat

Weeds controlled by Banvel herbicide:

Field bindweed (Morningglory)	Canada thistle
Leafy spurge	Russian knapweed
Curly dock	Black knapweed
Bitter dock	Tansy ragwort

Ask your ag chem dealer about the Banvel herbicide program to start you on your way to better perennial weed control and higher crop yields.

Chicago grain

CHICAGO (UPI) — Wheat was lower, corn and oats mixed and soybeans irregularly higher at the close Wednesday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

CHOICE. The Idaho First ALL-SAVERS Alternative.

It's here.
Now you can drop in to any Idaho First office and pick up an ALL-SAVERS Certificate . . . a top choice for the saver/investor in today's environment. This is a one year, high-yield, tax-exempt certificate of deposit newly authorized by the Congress and approved by the Internal Revenue Service.

High rate of interest.

The All-Savers Certificate earns interest at the rate of 70% of the average yield on One Year U.S. Treasury Bills in effect at the time the certificate is established, and is guaranteed for one full year. Check with your Idaho First office for the current rate. All-Savers Certificates are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Tax-exempt earnings.

Interest earned by the All-Savers Certificate is exempt from Federal income tax up to $1,000 ($2,000 if you file a joint return). You not only earn high interest, but you really save the money you earn.

Low minimum balance.

The All-Savers Certificate can be opened for as little as $500, a much lower balance than many investments with similar return. Remember, though, your balance is insured by the FDIC up to $100,000.

Withdrawals.

Withdrawals prior to maturity are subject to substantial interest penalties and loss of the tax exemption benefit.

$20,000	25%	12.61%	12.37%	10.87%

Note: Approximate figures in the chart are based on 1981 tax tables. Interest rate on All-Savers Certificate is equal to 70% of the average investment yield of 52 week U.S. Treasury Bills as of the most recent auction date (Sept. 4, 1981).
*Based upon average yield of four major Money Market Funds offered in Idaho from Jan. 1, 1981 to Aug. 28, 1981. (16.5%)
Based upon average Money Market Certificate yield from Jan. 1, 1981 to Aug. 28, 1981. (14.5%)

Better than a Money Market Fund.

By investing your funds in an All-Savers Certificate on October 1, you could earn more than by investing in Money Market Funds, depending on current rates of return and your tax bracket. The key is your after-tax rate of return. The chart above compares the average rates of return (after taxes) of four major Money Market Funds, Money Market Certificates and that of the All-Savers Certificate. In addition, deposits to an All-Savers Certificate are insured by the FDIC.

Compare all investments wisely.

When considering any investment, Idaho First believes you should be well informed. Once you know all the facts, we believe you'll choose Idaho First. Idaho savers and investors have been doing so for over 114 years.
Drop by any Idaho First office today and ask about the new All-Savers Certificate and how you can start earning high interest today. We'll be happy to answer any of your questions and look forward to serving you.

U.S. clamps lid on lending

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said Wednesday it is politically "not feasible" for the United States to raise its contribution for international lending to low-income countries.

The United States has "stretched out" its payments to the International Development Association, the branch of the World Bank that lends to the poorest nations.

In response, the more than 30 other IDA donor countries decided in closed meetings this week to reserve the right to scale down their fiscal 1982 contributions by the same proportion the United States has reduced its donation for that year.

The arithmetic of this is that IDA stands to lose 25 percent of the money it had expected during fiscal 1982 starting today.

In a news conference before Wednesday's session of the annual meeting of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, Regan said the United States historically has been among the most generous of nations and contines to support the bank and the monetary fund.

"We, however, have policital realities that we have to face in the United States," he told reporters from around the world.

"Our party does not control the Congress . . . For the United States to do more at this time is not feasible."

Regan said U.S. budget cuts are needed to reduce this country's inflation, which he said will benefit developing countries more than providing aid.

DONALD REGAN
...no control of Congress

Thirty-three nations agreed last year to provide $12 billion to run IDA during 1981-83. Congress approved the U.S. share of $3.24 billion, but stretched it out in three unequal installments — $500 million in 1981, $850 million in 1982 and $1.85 billion in 1983.

The $850 million for 1982 still is subject to follow-up congressional appropriation. The administration has proposed reducing this to $820 million.

Other donor countries said that would amount to a 25 percent reduction from the $1.08 billion the United States would have given under the original plan for equal payments. Hence, if the other donors do the same, the $4 billion IDA expected in 1982 will be reduced to $3 billion.

There are, however, ways IDA could reduce the potential loss to the developing world. It could seek stopgap funds from the World Bank, as it has done before. It could take part in projects jointly with the bank or jointly with the private sector. All these are being explored.

Conoco, DuPont wrap up big corporate takeover

STAMFORD, Conn. (UPI) — Chemical giant Du Pont Co. and Conoco Inc., the nation's 9th largest oil company, formally merged Wednesday completing the biggest corporate takeover in U.S. history.

The merger became official at 8:28 a.m. MDT after Conoco shareholders at Stamford approved the merger of the oil and coal company into Du Pont and a certificate of merger was filed with Delaware's secretary of state. Du Pont shareholders approved the deal at a special meeting Aug. 17.

Du Pont, the world's largest chemical company, acquired Conoco through a cash and stock-swap offer valued at more than $7.5 billion in a widely publicized bidding war against Mobil Oil Corp. and the Montreal-based Seagram Co. liquor empire.

Seagram, however, did manage to obtain enough Conoco shares in the takeover contest to give it a 20 percent stake in the new Du Pont-Conoco combination.

With the merger, the Du Pont Co., based in Wilmington, Del., becomes the 7th largest U.S. industrial company on the Fortune 500 list with annual sales of $32 billion, based on 1980 figures.

U.S. Steel sells coal reserves to Standard Oil of Ohio

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — U.S. Steel Corp. and Standard Oil Co. of Ohio announced Wednesday they have completed the sale of several of the steelmaker's coal reserves to the oil firm for about $600 million.

Under terms of the transaction, Cleveland-based Sohio has acquired reserves in West Virginia, Utah, Illinois and Pennsylvania.

U.S. Steel chairman David M. Roderick said the proceeds from the sale will have a significant effect on the company's third quarter income. More than 90 percent of the proceeds will directly increase pre-tax profits.

A.W. Whitehouse Jr., Sohio chairman, said the purchase reflects his firm's plans to become a more important factor in the coal industry. Roderick said even with the sale, U.S. Steel's reserves still amount to more than 2.3 billion tons, and are adequate for the company's needs.

Savers

Q. Will my deposit earn 12.61 percent for the entire year?

A. Yes, if you leave the monthly interest payments on it for the full year. If you withdraw the monthly interest, your return will be lower. Whatever the monthly interest rate set by each subsequent T-bill auction, that is what you will earn during the one-year life of the All-Savers. The next T-bill auction is Oct. 1. That adjusted annual investment rate is what the second issue of All Savers will be paying for one month beginning Monday, Oct. 5.

Q. Should I buy an All Savers now or wait until Oct. 5?

A. This Friday you will know the new rate, and if it is lower than 12.61 percent for the first issue, buy on Friday or Saturday. If the new rate is higher, buy next Monday.

Q. What will be the dollar amounts of All-Savers Certificates?

A. Banks can issue them in any amount. The law merely specifies that they must offer a $500 one, others may be higher or lesser amounts, depending on bank policy.

Q. How long must the All Savers stay invested?

A. One year from the day of issue.

Q. Is there any penalty for early withdrawal?

A. Yes. Loss of three months' interest and the tax exemption credit. Some specialists suggest these penalties are the best reasons for not putting your entire investment in one All Savers Certificate. Instead, they suggest you buy several. Then if you should need emergency money, you can redeem one or more of the certificates without losing either interest or tax exemption on the total sum. Even if you have to redeem an All Savers, you still can invest in others before December, 1982.

Q. Are the All-Savers insured?

A. Yes, by the various federal agencies that insure bank, savings and loan, and credit union deposits.

Q. Should a husband and wife have an All Savers in both names?

A. Yes, if you plan to stay married and will continue filing a joint tax return. Have it made out to John Doe OR Jane Doe. Should either of you disappear, it is easier for the stay-at-home to cash.

Q. My wife and I now have $10,000 invested in a savings bank six-month money market certificate. I understand this can be converted into an All Savers. How does this work?

A. Federal regulators have ruled that a switch can be made without the usual penalties so long as the All Savers interest rate is lower than the six-month certificate rate. What you lose in interest, you gain in federal tax exemption. It is easy; just tell the bank to switch. Be sure, though, that you don't switch any more than will earn you the maximum $2,000 tax exemption, or $15,860 if you invest at the 12.61 percent first-issue rate. Single taxpayers should not switch a $10,000 money market certificate into an All Savers, since they would be losing a better interest on the $2,070 difference between the $10,000 and the maximum tax exemption deposit of $7,930.

Q. I signed up several weeks ago for one of those 28 percent come-on All Savers. Will I have any problems?

A. No, so long as the bank does not require you automatically to switch into an All Savers. If it does, the Internal Revenue Service has said you lose your tax exemption. So enjoy the 28 percent up-front bonus, which will be taxed on 1981 income by both the federal government and the state, and your interest exemption will start on Thursday.

Peking waves olive branch

PEKING (UPI) — China offered a peace package to Taiwan Wednesday.

It was its first comprehensive proposal for unifying the country and said Taiwan could maintain its armed forces and share power with the communists in Peking.

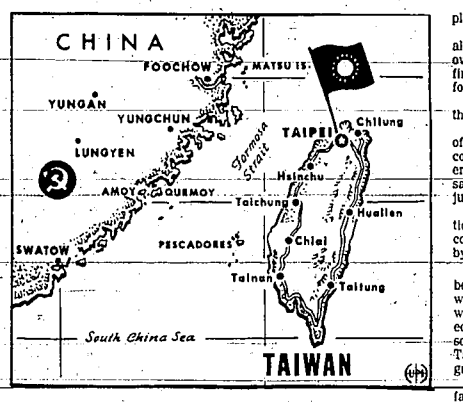
Within hours, the Nationalist regime rejected the offer and called on Peking to relinquish communism.

On the eve of the 32nd anniversary of the communist victory now observed as National Day on the mainland, National People's Congress Chairman Ye Jianying announced the proposals to end "the unfortunate separation of the Chinese nation."

Ye called for talks between the Communist Party and the Kuomintang (Nationalists) of Taiwan "on a reciprocal basis," possibly leading to a sharing of power after unification.

"After the country is reunified, Taiwan can enjoy a high degree of autonomy as a special administrative region and it can retain its armed forces," Ye said.

"People in authority and representative personages of various circles in Taiwan may take up posts of leadership in national political bodies and participate in running the state," he said.



Ye, whose duties are equivalent to a head of state, also promised to let Taiwan retain its present socio-economic system, its way of life and "economic and cultural relations with foreign countries" — falling just short of diplomatic ties.

Ye also offered guarantees for private property, business investment and non-discrimination against people from Taiwan.

Although Chinese leaders had casually mentioned most of the proposals over the past two years, it was the first time Peking offered them in a formal package.

Taiwan predictably turned down the offer.

"This is essentially a continuation of their united front propaganda that contains nothing new," Taiwan government spokesman James Soong said, adding the aim was to "subjugate the free Chinese."

"The only way to bring about national unification is to abandon the communist system, which is rejected by the Chinese people," Soong said.

Diplomats in China said they believe Peking scored political points with the peace package. The overture was partly intended to show the United States that China wants a peaceful solution — to the thorny problem of Taiwan — a major obstacle for the growth of Sino-American relations.

"And if it fails, it's the other guy's fault," one diplomat said.

The peace proposals also would make it more difficult for the United States to justify selling arms to the Nationalists, who fled to Taiwan after the communist victory in 1949.

FBI nabs suspected terrorist

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The FBI Wednesday arrested suspected IRA terrorist William Joseph Quinn, wanted by British police as the suspected killer of a London policeman and for conspiracy for several bombings in England.

Quinn, an American citizen, was arrested at a retail outlet store in adjoining Daly City, where he worked as a clerk. The FBI said he was arrested without resistance.

He was ordered held without bail by federal magistrate I. Steele Langford and extradition proceedings were begun to return him to England to stand trial.

Quinn is charged in England with shooting police constable Stephen Tibble on Feb. 26, 1975, in Kensington, London, after he was detained for questioning. He is also charged with conspiring with others to explode bombs.

In papers filed by British detective inspector Alan Lewis, Quinn is alleged to have been involved with sending bombs through the mail which later exploded and injured several people.

Key Iranian military leaders die in transport plane crash

ANKARA, Turkey (UPI) — Iran's defense minister and three other top military commanders died in an air crash near Tehran, the state-run radio reported Wednesday.

The disaster left the country's armed forces virtually leaderless.

Government sources contacted by telephone in Tehran said the American-built C-130 Hercules transport plane crashed Tuesday at a firing range at Kahrizak, south of Tehran, as it was bringing the military brass back from the Iraqi war front.

Tehran radio said Defense Minister Brig. Gen. Seyed Musa Namju; Gen. Vaiollah Fallahi, acting chief of staff of the joint command; Gen. Kolah Douz, acting commander of the revolutionary guards; and Gen. Javad Fakouri, former defense minister and air force commander, were among "a number of passengers" killed in the crash.

The radio, monitored in Ankara, Turkey, said their funerals would take place Thursday.

The government sources said an undetermined number of Iranian wounded from the war with Iraq were aboard the plane, which was flying the generals to Tehran from the frontline city of Ahvaz in southwestern Khuzistan province, the sources said.

Except for one source who said the aircraft developed a "technical fault," there was no official word on what caused the crash.

An official at the Tehran office of the chief of staff, contacted by telephone, said, "Investigations into the air crash are still continuing, but at the moment we are not suspecting anyone."

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini scheduled a top-level meeting with the Iran's clergy to discuss the tragedy, the government sources said.

Opposition sources said the military leaders were all known to be loyal Khomeini men who had served the Islamic leader since the 1979 revolution.

Gen. Fallahi became the armed forces chief of staff after Khomeini dismissed Abolhassan Bani-Sadr from the military command shortly before he also fired him from the presidency June 22.

British Labor Party takes stand favoring full nuclear disarmament

BRIGHTON, England (UPI) — The opposition Labor Party voted by a majority of nearly two-to-one Wednesday to commit the any future Labor government to unilateral nuclear disarmament and removal of American nuclear bases from Britain.

But it rejected by more than three-to-one a proposal for "an immediate, total and unilateral withdrawal from all connections with NATO."

The voting came at the end of a 90-minute debate in the party's annual rank-and-file convention, with speaker after speaker warning that Britain would be destroyed if a superpower nuclear war was fought in Europe.

The only delegate to speak out against nuclear disarmament, Sir John Boyd, an engineering union leader and one of Britain's most respected trade union moderates, was booed and shouted down.

"The Soviet leaders have made it clear they do not believe in unilateral nuclear disarmament," he said amid loud heckling from left-wing delegates. "In this uncertain world we cannot remain defenseless."

The vote for unilateral nuclear disarmament and closure of U.S. bases was 4,596,000 against 2,313,000. The big voting figures are explained by the fact that, although there were only about 1,300 delegates, the big trade unions cast bloc votes determined by their membership.

The vote against quitting NATO was 5,206,000 against 1,619,000.

The disarmament motion said the conference "instructs the national executive committee to ensure that the next election manifesto includes an unambiguous commitment to unilateral nuclear disarmament."

Quick end to hijacking

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — The pilot of an Indian Airlines plane hijacked by five Sikh extremists and forced to fly to Pakistan said Wednesday the air pirates pressed daggers dripping with blood against his neck when they seized the aircraft.

Passengers aboard the Boeing 737 said they were forced to chant political slogans as the turbaned Sikhs ran through the aisles brandishing long knives and a pistol during Tuesday's hijack.

Pakistani commandos disguised as cleaners boarded the plane early Wednesday as it stood on the tarmac in Lahore, and overpowered the hijackers. Twenty other machine gun carrying commandos stormed the jetliner, and the assault ended in just thiree minutes, with no injuries, officials said.

Neutron decision called 'tactless'

LONDON (UPI) — NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns Wednesday called the U.S. decision to produce the neutron warhead tactless.

Luns also said he was appalled at the attitude of some European governments towards nuclear modernization.

"In all frankness, the recent enhanced radiation warhead production decision was not an example of tact in the conduct of international relations," Luns told a meeting of the Atlantic Treaty Association, which seeks to inform the public about alliance problems.

In his first public criticism of the U.S. decision to produce the neutron weapon, which kills with a high dose of radiation while reducing property damage, Luns said: "The new U.S. administration has tended to be too lax in putting its positive interest in effective arms control across in public.

"It has allowed the impression, albeit false, to grow that it is reluctant to pursue the subject and is preoccupied with the pursuit of military supremacy."

Luns warned such an impression could do as much harm to the alliance as "the appearance of excessive European devotion to arms control at the expense of maintaining a stout defense."

In a speech examining growing divisions within the alliance over nuclear arms deployment, Luns said he sympathized with European anxieties over NATO's December 1979 decision to introduce new cruise and Pershing missiles.

"I am frankly appalled," he said, however, "at the way people who know better have allowed the myth to spread that theater nuclear force modernization is an initiative being foisted by the United States upon its European allies. The truth is that it was a European initiative."

Change ways, Haig advises Russians

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — In the first high-level meeting between the Soviet Union and the Reagan Administration, the Soviets were told future relations will depend on a fundamental change in Soviet global behavior, a senior administration official said Wednesday.

The official gave the first authoritative description of the nine hours of talks between Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

He described the two meetings the "start of a process in which contentious issues could be systematically dealt with . . . to produce a change in Soviet international activities."

The official said Haig told the Soviets the United States "could not continue to accept the pattern of Soviet global behavior."

Gromyko, according to the U.S. official "listened seriously" to the grievances raised by Haig, in the same way Haig listened to Soviet complaints about American actions.

In the first official Soviet account of their meeting Monday, Tass said Gromyko "gave a principled assessment of the foreign policy course of the United States, pointing to the fruitlessness of the attempts to achieve military superiority."

Gromyko said the Soviet Union is not seeking confrontation with the United States, Tass said, and "as always gives preference to efforts in favor of the relaxation of international tension, scaling down the arms race and settling conflict situations through talks."

The U.S. official said Haig dealt with specific cases of "Soviet interventionist behavior" including Afghanistan, Poland, and the use of Cuban proxies in Africa and the Western hemisphere. Haig left with the impression the Soviets consider their Afghan intervention a burden but are not likely to pull out soon.

Haig also warned the Soviets that any intervention in Poland would have "profoundly serious, long-lasting effects" on every aspect of the relationship, including arms control talks.

By Oswald Jacoby and Alan Sontag

North's three-club bid was Stayman and the professor found himself in an apparently routine spade game.

The play appeared routine also. He won the club lead with his king, cashed his ace of trumps and finessed his jack after East played the 10.

From then on it was a simple matter to draw the last trump and run four diamonds to discard one heart. Then the heart king lost to West's ace, so the Prof made five odd.

"Why did you finesse the trump jack?" asked the student. "I know it worked, but wouldn't West have held the queen?"

"Of course," replied the Prof. "I really didn't care. My play insured my contract. If the finesse had lost, West could do nothing to hurt me. I would be sure of one heart discard on the long diamond and would make my game."

Note what would have happened if the Prof had played out his two high trumps. He would have gone right after diamonds, but East would have ruffed the third diamond and led his queen. of hearts through South's king. The defense would collect three tricks to go with their one trump.
